

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

PREFACE.

A GLANCE at these 'Hints and Cautions' will be sufficient to show that their aim is nothing higher than to present in a moderate compass some of the main rules to be borne in mind in writing Attic Greek Prose. Nothing like an elaborate treatment of the subject has been attempted; and it will be evident that on some points connected with the structure of the Greek sentence, such as the various senses of the Cases, and the uses of the Prepositions, little or nothing has been said. These must be studied in the grammars, where they are explained with the fulness which they require. They cannot be merely 'tasted,' but must be 'chewed and digested.' A grammar deals with a language in its totality. Its province is to enter into every peculiarity and idiom, many of which, though found in the best authors, it would be obviously undesirable to imitate when composing in an ancient language. Again, Prose and Poetry, Attic and Ionic and other dialectic varieties, must all alike be included in a grammar; and the learner is therefore apt to lose sight of the differences that stamp any one style. An attempt is here made to draw attention solely to the more distinctive features of Attic Prose. I have not scrupled to make large use of the excellent works on Greek Syntax by Dr. Clyde, Dr. Farrar, and Madvig, and of Goodwin's 'Greek Moods and Tenses.' To these books reference is made by the abbreviations C., F., M., and G.

It is hoped that the Appendix of Translations may prove useful, both as illustrating the rules here given, and as showing how difficulties in this branch of composition may be surmounted. My best thanks are due to the following gentlemen for their kindness in contributing the versions marked by their initials: The Rev. H. A. J. Munro, Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge; S. H. Butcher, Esq., Fellow of University College, Oxford; and my colleagues, the Rev. E. D. Stone, late Fellow of King's College, Cambridge; Walter Durnford, Esq., Fellow of King's College, Cambridge; and Henry Broadbent, Esq., Fellow of Exeter College, Oxford. For the few that remain I am myself responsible.

I have also to thank my friend Mr. Stone for valuable suggestions made to me while preparing this little volume.

HINTS AND CAUTIONS

ON

ATTIC GREEK PROSE COMPOSITION.

General Remarks.—Greek Prose is not harder than Latin Prose provided it be equally practised and studied. In some respects indeed it is easier: there is, for instance, less difficulty in Greek than in Latin, as to (a) Relative Clauses, (b) the use of the Subjunctive, (c) the Oratio Obliqua, the rules for which are in some points less strict [see below under each of these heads]. The words which describe the general character of the Latin Language are dignified, nervous, forcible, grave, stately. The words which describe the Genius of the Greek Language are flexible, many-sided, subtle, graceful.

Bad translation from English into Greek Prose (apart from Grammatical errors) arises mainly from

1. Poverty of Vocabulary.
2. Being misled by the structure of the Latin sentence.
3. Too strict adherence to the structure of the English.

A series of English words rendered into their supposed Greek equivalents is very far, of course, from forming a Greek sentence. In the first place, the difference caused by the use of an inflectional language is great. Words which with us must be closely connected, if we would avoid obscurity—in Greek might be widely separated. The inflection marked the relation in which they stood to each other. Greater choice was thus offered between different combinations, and therefore greater variety was attained. Again, Language is the dress of thought. The thought which has to be expressed must first be clearly grasped ; and next, the form in which a Greek would have expressed it must be perceived and employed. This can only be learnt by familiarity with the best authors, and frequent and careful observation of their style.

I.—THE ARTICLE

1. Where the Definite Article is expressed in English, never omit it in Greek : e.g. 'on the following day the soldiers began to march to the city' τῇ ὑστεραίᾳ ἐπορεύοντο οἱ στρατιῶται εἰς τὴν πόλιν.

Exceptions—βασιλεύς, for 'the King of Persia,' ἥλιος, γῆ, and other words in every day use ; so ἔαρ ὑπέφαινε 'the Spring was just appearing.' 'Names of striking natural objects, of occupations, arts and sciences, of virtues and vices, of near relatives, and of familiar places, because they denote what is capable of being personified or regarded as unique, may be used without the article, particularly when governed by a preposition. We talk of a man being "on" 'Change, or "at church," or "in town," as the Greeks talked of a man being ἐν ἄστει, ἐν ἀγορᾷ (C. 5. Obs. 3).

2. Use the Article with proper names, when they have been previously mentioned, or to call special attention to them, as ὁ Σωκράτης 'the famous Socrates;' but if the proper name recur frequently, the article need not be always repeated; and if any designation is added, e. g. Σωκράτης ὁ φιλόσοφος, omit it.

3. The Article with places. With rivers the common order is ὁ Εὐφράτης πόταμος—and so with hills, countries, and sometimes islands, when they are of the same gender with the word in apposition. τὸ Σούνιον ἄκρον, ἡ Δήλος νῆσος. But also Δήλος ἡ νῆσος. See F. Syntax, 12 note.

4. Remember that the Article is often used where we do not use it: (a) especially of a class, ὁ ἄνθρωπος 'man,' or an abstract idea, ἡ ἀρετὴ λυσιτελεῖ 'virtue is profitable;' (b) for our possessive pronouns, when unemphatic, οἱ γονεῖς στέργουσι τὰ τέκνα 'parents love their children;' (c) distributively, δὺς τοῦ μηνὸς 'twice a month;' (d) in some idiomatic uses with numerals, ἀμφὶ τοὺς εἴκοσι about twenty (but εἰς εἴκοσι without the article), τὰ δύο μέρη = two thirds.

5. Remember the position of the Article in adjectival clauses. 'If the Adjective is placed first or last, it is not an epithet but a predicate' (F. 18). ψευδεῖς οἱ λόγοι or οἱ λόγοι ψευδεῖς = the words are false; but οἱ ψευδεῖς λόγοι = the false words. Observe the use of this tertiary predicate, e.g. οὐδ' ἀσαφῆ τὴν ἐλευθερίαν νομίζω ἐπιφέρειν (Thuc. iv. 86) nor is the liberty I offer you a dim or doubtful one. It is often indispensable to bring out in translation the full force of a passage. See instances in the specimen translations, Appendix, No. IX. (sub fin.), No. X. (third sentence).

6. Avoid mistakes in the use of the Article with πᾶς.

(a) πᾶς when it = the whole has the article, the usual order being the predicative one, πᾶσα ἡ πόλις, or ἡ πᾶσα πόλις—ἀνὰ πᾶσαν τὴν ἡμέραν, all day long; τὰ πάντα δέκα, ten in all: so also ὅλος: but the attributive form also occurs—ἡ πᾶσα Σικελία, ἡ σύμπασα πόλις; τὸ ὅλον γένος: (b) πᾶς when it = every, all, stands without the article—πᾶς ἀνὴρ, πᾶσα πόλις, ἀνὰ πᾶσαν ἡμέραν, πάντα δέκα, ten of each.

7. ἑκάτερος, each of two, ἀμφω, ἀμφοτέροι with a noun always take the article, e.g. ἀμφοῖν ταῖν χειρῶν. With ἕκαστος it may be expressed or omitted (M. 11).

8. Notice particularly the use of the Article in forming Substantival phrases. Note especially its use, (a) with infinitives, (b) with participles, and neuter adjectives, to form abstract nouns. This is a most important factor in Greek Prose, and will often solve difficulties of translation, e.g. (a) existence τὸ ζῆν, deviation from nature τὸ παρὰ φύσιν πράττειν, consciousness of pleasure τὸ συνειδέναι τὸ ἡδύ. It may be used in any case, e.g. for the pleasure of walking διὰ τὴν τοῦ περιπατεῖν ἡδονήν—by means of good government διὰ τοῦ εὐνομεῖσθαι. (b) fitness τὸ προσήκον, τὸ πρέπον, duty τὸ καθήκον, τὰ καθήκοντα, the natural constitution of things τὰ φύσει καθεστηκότα, the Commonwealth τὸ κοινόν, extremes τὰ ἄκρα, superfluities τὰ περισσά, the Trojan war τὰ Τρωϊκά, successive rulers οἱ ἀεὶ κρατοῦντες, versatility τὸ πολύτροπον, simplicity, guilelessness τὸ εὐθές, the proverb τὸ λεγόμενον, contempt for the obligations under which we lie to our rulers τὸ ὀλιγωρεῖν τῶν τοῖς ἐν τέλει ὀφειλομένων.

The last instance illustrates both usages.

9. For the Article with Pronouns (see below on Pronouns IV. 5. 2).

II. SUBSTANTIVES.

1. Avoid the mistake of using Ionic forms in the first declension, e.g. πάτρη, φιλίη. Observe, however, these forms always used in Attic, κόρη, κόρρη, ῥοή, ἀκοή, σκευή, ζωή, and that â is retained in all cases of μνᾶ, Ἄθηνᾶ (= Ἀθηνάα), and some words of Doric origin (Jelf, 78).

2. The Attic Declension. The following words should be remembered as dropping ν in the accusative singular, ἄλως (a threshing floor) ἄλω, ἔως (morning) ἔω, and the places ἡ Κέως τὴν Κέω, ἡ Κῶς τὴν Κῶ, ἡ Τέως τὴν Τέω, ὁ Ἄθως τὸν Ἄθω. So too the adjectives ἀγῆρως (not waxing old), ἐπίπλεως (quite full), ὑπέρχρεως (over head and ears in debt). λαγώς a hare, makes λαγών or λαγώ.

3. Anomalous Nouns. Of words which mix two declensions, remember these, σκότος occasionally neuter as well as masculine,—σῖτος, plural σῖτα,—στάδιον, plural στάδιοι (στάδια once in Thucydides); δένδρεσι is more usual than δένδροις, even in Prose. ὀνείροις from the form ὄνειρος occurs once in Plato, but ὀνείρατα is the form regularly employed throughout the plural, and also for the oblique cases in the singular. ὄναρ is found in the nom. and acc., but it is chiefly used (like ὕπαρ) adverbially, ‘in a dream.’ Other irregular forms, given in the Grammars, are dialectical or poetical, and therefore of no avail in Attic Greek Prose. The following peculiarities should be observed: πρεσβευτής = an ambassador, πρέσβεις = ambassadors. (πρεσβύτης = an old man.) υἱός, υἰόν are the only parts used in this form, all the other cases are formed as if from νίεύς. Notice too that compound proper names in κράτης, σθένης and φάνης, as well as Ἀρης*, have two forms for the accusative, Σωκράτη (Plato), Σωκράτην (Xenoph.), Δημοσθένη and -σθένην, Ἀριστοφάνη* and -άνην, Ἀρη* and Ἀρην*, and that a contraction takes place in nouns of the 3rd declension in ευσ preceded by a vowel, as Πειραιεύς, ἀγνιεύς, Πειραιᾶ, Πειραιῶς, ἀγνιᾶ, ἀγνιῶς.

III. ADJECTIVES.

1. Avoid the mistake of using Ionic forms in the feminine of adjectives in ρος and ος pure. The only exception to the latter is ὄγδοος, ὄγδόη. Remember the following contractions:—χρυσέα, ἦ. ἄπλους, διπλοῦς, τριπλοῦς, etc. contract ἀπλόη ἄπλη, etc., but ἀργυρέα ἀργυρά. ἄθροος ἄθροα is seldom contracted.

2. Compound Adjectives in ος as a rule have only two terminations.

Obs. 1. Among the exceptions (which it is difficult to classify) are those in κός, τός, τέος, which are derived from compound verbs, e.g. ἐπιδεικτικός, but not all of these, e.g. ἀπόρρητος, ὑποπτος. Adjectives in αιος are very uncertain, e.g. δίκαιος, βέβαιος, ἀνάγκαιος vary between two and three terminations, but most in ιος, ειος, ιμος have only two, as δόλιος, βασίλειος, γνώριμος, though not compounded.

Obs. 2. Even some primitive adjectives have but two terminations, e.g. βάρβαρος, ἡμερος, τιθασός, ῥαμεῖ ἡσυχος, δάπανος, ἔωλος. (See Jelf, 127.)

3. The degrees of Comparison. Notice (a) that the neuter accusative singular forms the Adverb from the comparative degree of Adjectives, and the neuter accusative plural from the superlative,—often with ὡς or ὅτι, ὡς τάχιστα, ὅτι βέλτιστα; (b) the idiomatic use of two comparatives, προσαγωγότερον ἢ ἀληθέστερον ‘more attractive than truthful;’ (c) the remarkable idiom of ἐν τοῖς πρῶτοι among the first where ἐν τοῖς = πρὸ πάντων. It is used irrespective of gender and number, e.g. ἐν τοῖς πρώτη ἐγένετο ἡ στάσις. (Thuc. iii. 81.) (d) εἴ τις or εἴ τις καὶ ἄλλος is often used to intensify a superlative.

4. Three Idioms of the Adjective constantly required.

(a) Adjectives are often used in Greek where in English we use Substantives, e.g. half of the Peloponnese ἡ ἡμίσεια τῆς Πελοποννήσου,—most of life ὁ πλεῖστος τοῦ βίου. Observe, The Adjective with the Article takes the gender of the following noun. This is the regular construction in Prose (where it is more common than in Verse) with partitives and numerals. The Adjective, however, assumes this substantival force in other cases too, e.g. οἱ παλαιοὶ τῶν ποιητῶν for οἱ παλαιοὶ ποιηταί—τῆς γῆς ἡ ἀρίστη, ὁ παράλογος τοῦ πολέμου. (b) Adjectives are often used in Greek where we use an Adverb or a Preposition with a Substantive, e.g. in expressions of time, they passed the plain in the twilight σκοταῖοι διήλθον τὸ πῆδιον (Xen.). So τριταῖος, τεταρταῖος, etc., defining when, on what day? But also in other relations, e.g. ὑπόσπονδοι ἀπήεσαν. So ἄσμενοι gladly, ἔκοντες willingly. (c) We say many famous men, but the Greeks said πολλοὶ καὶ ἔνδοξοι ἄνδρες.

IV. PRONOUNS.

1. For the Third Personal Pronouns (he, she, it) use the demonstratives ὃδε, οὗτος, ἐκεῖνος in the nominative.

There are also the forms peculiar to Attic Prose, καὶ ὅς, καὶ ἥ (but in accusative καὶ τὸν καὶ τήν)—ἥ δ' ὅς 'quoth he,' and ἥ δ' ἥ, and a few phrases where the old demonstrative force of the Article survived, e.g. τὸν καὶ τόν, τὸ καὶ τό, τῇ καὶ τῇ such and such; also τὸ μὲν τῇ, τὸ δὲ τῇ partim—partim, πρὸ τοῦ 'before that time,' and the common ὁ μὲν—ὁ δέ (C. 3. Obs. 2.)

For the oblique cases use the cases of αὐτός.

2. For the Reflexive Pronoun (himself, herself, itself) in the Nominative, use αὐτός αὐτή αὐτό. The oblique cases are ἑ, οὐ, οἱ. The following passage in Plato (Symposium, 174, quoted by Donaldson) is worth studying, τὸν οὖν Σωκράτη (ἔφη ὁ Ἀριστόδημος) ἑαυτῷ (i. e. Socrates) πως προσέχοντα τὸν νοῦν κατὰ τὴν ὁδὸν πορεύεσθαι ὑπολειπόμενον καί, περιμένοντος οὐ (i.e. Aristodemus) κελεύειν προίεναι . . . ἐπεὶ δὲ γενέσθαι ἐπὶ τῇ οἰκίᾳ οἱ (i.e. Aristodemus) παῖδα ἀπαντήσαντα ἄγειν, . . . καὶ ἔ (i.e. Aristodemus) ἀπονέζειν τὸν παῖδα—‘Aristodemus said that Socrates stayed behind wrapt in his own thoughts and desired Aristodemus, who was waiting, to go on. When he reached the house a servant met him and led him in, and the attendant assisted him to wash.’ These forms, however, soon became obsolete, ‘οὐ and ἔ are found in Plato alone of the great Attic prose writers’ (Clyde).

ἑαυτοῦ -ῆς or αὐτοῦ -ῆς, were substituted for them. ‘He killed himself’ would be ἀπέκτεινεν ἑαυτόν, not ἔ. In the plural there are two forms in use, in the 3rd person, ἑαυτοῦς ἅς ἅ, etc. (or αὐτούς)—and also σφᾶς αὐτούς, σφῶν αὐτῶν, σφίσι αὐτοῖς. The 1st and 2nd reflexive pronouns ἑμαυτοῦ -ῆς, σεαυτοῦ -ῆς, etc., have in the plural only the forms ἡμῶν αὐτῶν, ὑμῶν αὐτῶν, etc.

N.B. ἑαυτῶν may stand for the reciprocal ἀλλήλων, e.g. βούλεσθε πυνθάνεσθαι—αὐτῶν (Dem.) to ask one another, but ἀλλήλων can never stand for ἑαυτῶν.

3. Special uses of αὐτός: (a) αὐτός in the nom. always=self, e.g. αὐτὸς ἔφη ipse dixit. τρίτος αὐτός ‘himself the third,’ i.e. he with two others.

(b) αὐτός in the oblique cases, if they stand first in the sentence, also=self.

(c) the idiom of αὐτὸς αὐτοῦ with the comparative. θαρράλεώτεροι αὐτοὶ αὐτῶν, 'bolder than ever.'

(d) αὐτός with a substantive in the dative gives the notion of an accessory or accompaniment. αὐτοῖς τοῖς ἵπποις κατεκρημνίσθησαν (Xen.) 'horses and all they were thrown down the precipice.'

(e) αὐτός may = alone; sometimes αὐτὸς μόνος.

(f) The Attic neuter of ὁ αὐτός, the same, is generally not ταὐτὸ, but ταὐτόν. (So too τοιοῦτον and τοσοῦτον.)

Caution.—Never use in Prose the forms μίν, νίν, σφίν (the two latter can be used in writing Iambics).

4. The Possessive Pronouns. These are practically limited in Attic Prose to ἐμός, σός, ἡμέτερος, and ὑμέτερος. For σφέτερος is wholly reflexive, and νωότερος, σφωότερος, and ὅς are dialectical or poetical forms. A common substitute for the possessive is the genitive of the corresponding personal pronouns (ὁ πατήρ μου) or simply use the Article (above, I. 4. δ).

The Possessive Pronouns may denote the object. φόβῳ τῷ ὑμετέρῳ 'the fear (not which you feel, but) which you inspire.' τὴν ὑμετέραν ἐπιχείρησιν the attempt on you (Thuc. i. 33).

ἡμέτερος, ὑμέτερος, but not ἐμός, in Prose, may have a genitive standing in apposition to them, especially that of αὐτός, e.g. ἡμέτερον αὐτῶν οἰκοδόμημα (Plato).

5. The Demonstratives :

I. ὅδε	} denote	οὗτος	} what has
τοιοῦσδε		τοιοῦτος		been alτοσούσδε		τοσοῦτος		ready said.
τηλικόσδε		τηλικούτος

2. Avoid the mistake common with beginners of writing οὗτος πόλεμος, ἥδε ὁδός, ἐκεῖνο τεῖχος, for οὗτος ὁ πόλεμος, ἥδε ἡ ὁδός, ἐκεῖνο τὸ τεῖχος.

Notice (a) the collocation where an adjective is added. αὕτη ἡ στενὴ ὁδός, or ἡ στενὴ ὁδὸς αὕτη, or αὕτη ἡ ὁδὸς ἡ στενή, or more commonly ἡ στενὴ αὕτη ὁδός.

(b) The article is omitted when the pronoun is the subject and the substantive is the predicate of the sentence, e.g. τούτῳ διδασκάλῳ χρῆται 'he employs him as teacher.'

κίνησις αὕτη μεγίστη τοῖς Ἕλλησιν ἐγένετο, (Thuc. i. 1).

'This was by far the greatest movement.'

(c) With the demonstrative pronouns of quality and quantity, e.g. τοιοῦτος, τοσοῦτος, the article stands before them, when the notion of a class is prominent, e.g. ὁ τοιοῦτος ἀνὴρ, such a man = the man who acts thus. But τοιοῦτος ὁ ἀνὴρ = the man is such, τοιοῦτος being the predicate. [These words, therefore, are not analogous in their use to ὅδε, οὗτος, and ἐκεῖνος.]

6. Distinguish carefully between ἄλλος and ἕτερος.

τὸ ἕτερον στράτευμα = the other army (a different whole).

τὸ ἄλλο στράτευμα = the rest of the same army.

The English 'besides,' 'as well,' is often to be rendered by ἄλλος, e.g. οἱ πολῖται καὶ οἱ ἄλλοι ξένοι (Plato, Gorg. 473) 'citizens and foreigners as well.'

7. Emphasize the Definite Relatives ὃς, ὅσος, οἷος, by περ, the Indefinite ὅστις, ὅποσος, ὅποῖος, by δή, δήποτε, οὖν. With the forms thus strengthened cf. respectively quicunque, quantuscunque, qualiscunque. (C. 30.)

Obs. Of the Attic form of ὅστις—ὅτου, ὅτῳ are most common; the plural forms ὅτων, ὅτοις are rare.

8. Interrogative Pronouns. Clyde (27) gives a useful list of these, with the forms for direct and indirect sentences. For the latter those most used are ὅστις, ὁπότερος, ὅποσος, ὅποῖος. ὃς is sometimes used where ὅστις should be used. In the following sentence both occur: Θεμιστοκλῆς φράζει τῷ ναυκλήρῳ ὅστις ἐστὶ καὶ δι' ἃ φεύγει (Thuc. i. 137). But the direct forms are often used for greater animation: e.g. αἱ γυναῖκες ἡρώτων αὐτοὺς τίνες εἶεν (Xen.), (M. 198).

Caution.—Guard against confusing the indirect interrogative with the relative. Professor Jebb (on Electra, 316) points out that τις may be used for ὅστις only in indirect questions, but not for the relative; e.g. εἰπὲ τί σοι φίλον 'tell me what you wish' is classical, but ἰστόρει τί σοι φίλον, in the sense of 'ask whatever you wish,' is unclassical.

9. Attraction of the Relative. The Attic attraction of the relative, when it naturally would be in the accusative, but is attracted into the case of the antecedent (e.g. πάντων ὧν ἔσχον ἀγαθῶν σοι μετέδωκα of all that I had I gave you a share. ἀμελῶ ὧν με δεῖ πράττειν I neglect what I ought to do), is the rule and not the exception, and is constantly required.

For the limitations to its use, and for the rarer kinds of attraction, see C. 67, M. 103, Jelf, 822–825. Notice specially and use these attractions:—

(a) With the oblique cases of οὐδεὶς ὅστις οὐ (= πάντες).

οὐδενὸς ὅτου οὐ καταφρονεῖ οὐδενὶ ὅτῳ οὐ χαρίζεται.

This last is an instance of inverse attraction, the converse of ordinary attraction;—i.e. the antecedent is attracted into the case of the relative.

(b) ἔστιν οἷ=ἐνιοι some declined throughout and governed by prepositions as well as verbs. So too ἔστιν οὐ, ἔστιν ὅτε, etc.

V. NUMERALS.

1. The three different ways to express Eighteen and Nineteen.

(a) ὀκτώκαίδεκα, ἑννεακαίδεκα.

(b) δυοῖν (or δυεῖν)—ἐνὸς δέοντες εἴκοσι.

(c) δυοῖν δέοντων—ἐνὸς δέοντος εἴκοσι.

So 28, 29, 38, 39, etc. can be expressed by the two last forms :

48 men = δυοῖν δέοντες (or δυοῖν δέοντων) πεντήκοντα.

39 ships = νῆες μιᾶς δεούσαι (or μιᾶς δεούσης) ~~τριά-~~
τεσσαράκοντα.

2. The order in Compound Numbers. If the smaller precedes, καί is used. πέντε καὶ εἴκοσι (or εἴκοσι πέντε) (Greek and English here coincide—five and twenty or twenty-five). The same rule holds in Greek with the ordinals. πέμπτοι καὶ εἰκοστοί.

3. Observe the following terminations, temporals in -αῖος, as δευτεραῖος (see III. 4), multiples in -πλους, as διπλοῦς, proportionals in -πλάσιος, as διπλάσιος. Notice the absence of distributive forms which the Latins possess. They are expressed variously, e.g. σύνδυο, σύντρεις, or oftener by prepositions εἰς, κατά, ἀνά, διὰ (C. 21, 1).

4. Notice the form πολλοστός (multesimus) 'one taken out of many,' and so a very small part—a fraction with a large denominator—and its converse ὀλιγοστός ‘one out of a few.’ (For a full account of the ways in which fractions are expressed see Jelf, Gr. Gr. vol. i. 165 ; Donaldson, 254.)

5. Large numbers are expressed (not as in Latin by hundreds of thousands, but) by tens of thousands, δέκα μυριάδες = 100,000. For 20,000, 30,000, 40,000, etc. there are the forms δισμύριοι, τρισμύριοι, τετρακισμύριοι.

VI. CONCORD.

Under this head the chief points to be borne in mind (assuming a knowledge of the four general rules of agreement, which are the same in Greek as in Latin) are :—

(a) The gender of the Adjective where one Adjective refers to several Substantives.

Rule.—If they are sentient beings, and of the same gender, the Adjective takes that gender ; if of different gender, the rule of the ‘more worthy’ gender holds. If they are things, the Adjective is neuter, as παραχαλὶ καὶ στάσεις ὀλέθρια ταῖς πόλεσι (or ὀλέθριον).

(b) The only exception to the Attic schema, or rule of neuter plurals taking a verb singular, is important, as bringing out the reason of that rule. (Exceptio probat regulam.) Neuters do not contain the notion of individuality. They are regarded as a single whole; therefore the verb is in the singular. But when the notion of individuality is prominent, the verb is in the plural; e.g. ἐπῆλθον Ὀλύμπια (Thuc. i. 126), i.e. the various games of which the Olympic festival consisted. τὰ τέλη ὑπέσχοντο = the magistrates promised, but τὰ τέλη ὑπέσχετο 'the cabinet' (Jelf, 385).

(c) Of the other schemata, the construction κατὰ σύνεσιν, or sense figure, is most common in Prose, and explains many apparent violations of Concord. A few instances will here suffice.

τὸ πλῆθος οἴονται.

τὸ μεράκιόν ἐστι καλός.

τὰ τέλη καταβάντες.

φεύγει ἐς Κέρκυραν ὡς αὐτῶν (sc. τῶν Κερκυραίων) εὐεργέτης.

(For the anomalies in the dual in number and gender see Clyde, 63.)

(d) The whole and part schema is usual with ἕκαστος, the verb being plural.

ἕκαστος καὶ παίδων καὶ οἰκετῶν καὶ χρημάτων ἄρχουσι.

(e) The construction of verbals in -τέος is to be noticed. The predicative adjective is often in the neuter plural, e.g. οὐδ' οὐ παραδοτέα ἐστί.

VII. THE VERB.

Verbal Forms.

a. Be careful not to use a Future Active if it does not exist. A full list of Verbs preferring a Future of the Middle Form is given in Clyde, 31.

b. Middle Futures with a Passive meaning. The following is a list of such Futures used in Attic Prose :

ἀγνοήσομαι	*καταφρονήσομαι	*στερήσομαι
ἀδικήσομαι	*κινήσομαι	στρεβλώσομαι
ἀλώσομαι	*κωλύσομαι	ταράξομαι
ἀμφισβητήσομαι	*μαρτυρήσομαι	τηρήσομαι
ἀπιστήσομαι	μαστιγώσομαι	*τιμήσομαι
*ἄρξομαι	οικήσομαι	*τρίψομαι
*αὐξήσομαι	*ὀμαλῶμαι	οἶσομαι (rare)
βλάψομαι	*ὀμολογήσομαι	*φθεροῦμαι
ἐάσομαι	*παιδεύσομαι	*φιλήσομαι
εἶρξομαι	πολεμήσομαι	φρουρήσομαι
εὐλογήσομαι	*πολιορκήσομαι	*ὠφελήσομαι.
*ζημύωσομαι

Those with an asterisk have also a Future Passive, ἀρχθήσομαι, βλαβήσομαι, etc., but τιμηθήσομαι is rare. Conversely, the Future Passive is found for the Future Middle in ἄρχομαι, which has ἀχθεσθήσομαι as well as ἀχθέσομαι.

c. Learn the list of Passive Deponents (i.e. whose Aorist has a Passive form with an Active meaning); e.g.

διαλέγομαι, διελέχθην, in Clyde, 31, Obs. 2. All there given are used in Prose, except ἀλάομαι, whose Aorist ἡλήθην is rare and late.

d. Of Deponents with Passive sense as well as Active, the following parts occur in Attic Prose :

Perfects.—εἰργασμαι (and its participle), μεμιμημένος, οἰκείσθαι, κεκτημένος, ἡττιαμένος, ἡύκται, ἔσκεμμένα.

Aorists.—ᾠνηθέν, ἀπελωβήθη, χρησθῆ. Wherever both forms (e.g. ἐδέχθην and ἐδεξάμην) are contemporaneous, the distinction between the voices is observed (Jelf, 368). ἀποζηφισθέντα Dem. de Cor. 2/1.6

e. Use Compound Verbs as a general rule, and beware of using Verbs, or parts of Verbs, in the simple form which exist only in the compound form.

Many words supposed to be good Greek, because formed according to analogy, never occur (just as relictus is only found in Latin, never lictus).¹

The following list of words constantly required may be useful :—

To go.

Pres.	Imp.	Fut.	Perf.	Aorist.
βαίνω	ἀπέβαινον	ἀποβήσομαι	βέβηκα	ἀπέβην
	ῥεῖν	εἶμι

To come.

ἀφικνέομαι ἀφικνούμην ἀφίξομαι ἀφῆγμαι ἀφικόμην ἐφικνέομαι (less frequent, but used)

 ἦεν (very rare in Prose)
 ἦξω or ἀφίξομαι

To live.

ζάω ἔζην ζήσω βεβίωκα ἐβίον ζήσομαι ἐβίωσα βιώσομαι

To die.

θνήσκω ἔθνησκον ἀποθανοῦμαι ² τέθνηκα ἀπέθανον
 τεθνήξομαι

Also with the following verbs in the best Attic prose authors there is a constant preference for the compound forms to the simple.

ἐννυμι, 'to clothe,' does not occur, but ἀμφιέννυμι does ἤμαι, 'to sit' " " κάθημαι " ὀλλυμι, 'to destroy or lose' " " ἀπόλλυμι " ἀράσσω, 'to strike' " " { ἀπαράσσω } " φλέγω, 'to burn' " " καταφλέγω "

¹ ἔρχομαι is only used, as a rule, in the Present Indicative. For the moods ἔρχομαι, etc., the Attics employ ἴω, ἴοιμι, ἴθι, ἴών, ἰέναι.

² These forms take the place of the Passive Perfect and Aorist of ἀποκτείνω, which are not used.

πέμπομαι (the Middle) is not found, but ἀποπέμπομαι, μεταπέμπομαι, προπέμπομαι, are common.

κτείνω, to kill, is but rarely found in prose, where ἀποκτείνω takes its place in the Active, and for the Passive ἀποθνήσκω is used.

σπέρχω, to urge, and πτύσσω, to fold, are not found in their simple forms in prose. Thucydides uses ἐπισπέρχω and κατασπέρχω, Xenophon uses ἀναπτύσσω and περιπτύσσω, both as military terms.

πνέω, to breathe, is only used in prose, in pres. and imp. act. ;—but numerous compounds occur.

εὔδω, to sleep, is less common than καθεύδω.

σκοπέω, to view, consider, is thus supplemented by σκέπτομαι,—σκοπῶ, ἐσκόπου (σκοποῦμαι, ἐσκοπούμην), σκέφτομαι, ἔσκεμμαι, ἐσκεψάμην.

πλήσσω, to strike. The forms employed in prose for the simple verb are thus supplied :—

Active	παίω	πέπληγα (rare)	ἐπάταξα
	πατάξω		ἔπαισα
Passive	τύπτομαι	πέπληγμαι	ἐπλήγγην
		πεπλήξομαι	πληγγήσομαι

The form ἐπλάγην, πлагήσομαι, is used in compounds in the sense of striking with terror.

For the perf. pass. of τίθημι use κείμει, not τέθειμαι.

For ἵτλην and its forms use τολμάω, ἀνέχομαι, or ὑπομένω.

f. Augments. Notice (a) the peculiarities in βούλομαι, δύναμαι, μέλλω, which vary between ε and η, but in Thucydides, Xenophon, and Demosthenes, ἔβουλόμην, ἔδυνάμην, ἔμελλον prevail, and this form should be employed.

(b) εἰ and εὖ are not usually augmented: e.g. εἶξα, from εἶκω 'to yield,' εὐνομήθην. But εἰκάω makes generally ἤκαζον. εὐρίσκω is often augmented; ἡύρον, and even ἡύρηκα, etc., is found; and some other verbs, e.g. εὐφραίνω and εὖχομαι, take the same augment.

(c) διαιτάω is peculiar. The simple verb is augmented thus: διήτησα. Compounds take a double augment, e.g. κατεδιήτησα [διοικέω on the contrary follows the same law in compound as in simple forms]. There are five verbs with a double augment in Attic Prose: ἀνέχομαι, to endure, ἡνειχόμην, ἡνεσχόμην, ἀμπέχομαι, to wear, ἡμπειχόμην, παροινέω, to insult, ἐπαρφύουν, ἐπανορθόω, to set upright, ἐπηνώρθουν, ἐπηνόρθωσα (but ἀνόρθωσα in the simple), ἐνοχλέω, to trouble, ἠνώχλουν, ἠνάχλησα, ἠνώχληκα, ἀμφιγυνέω, to doubt, ἡμφιγυνόησα.

(d) ἐθέλω and θέλω. The former is the prevailing form in prose; θέλω is rare, and confined almost wholly to the present. ἤθελον is from ἐθέλω.

g. The Middle Voice. Beware of using the Active form of a Verb for the Middle; e.g. the mistake of translating 'to fear' by φοβεῖν instead of φοβεῖσθαι, or 'to attempt' by πειρᾶν for πειρᾶσθαι, λυπεῖν for λυπεῖσθαι, etc. Confusion of these two Voices is a fruitful source of error with beginners, and the appreciation of the broad distinctions of sense between such words as σπένδειν to pour a libation, σπένδεσθαι to make a treaty, ποιεῖν λόγον to compose a speech, ποιεῖσθαι to deliver it, πορεύειν to convey, πορεύεσθαι proficisci, ἀποδοῦναι to give back, ἀποδόσθαι to sell, is all important. Read carefully the full account of the Middle Verb in Clyde, 31, Obs. 3, 4; or Wilkins's Greek Prose, Intr. x.; Donaldson, Gr. Gr. 432.

The use of the Middle Verb is often essential in Greek where in English the reflex action of the Verb is not directly expressed: e.g. (a) I presume not to deliver an opinion concerning this οὐκ ἄξιῶ γνώμην ἀποφῆνασθαι τούτου τοῦ πράγματος πέρι.

(b) To lay up gratitude in store καταθέσθαι χάριν.
(Thuc.)

(c) I, providing for this, drew up this decree ἀ ἐγὼ προορώμενος, τὸ ψήφισμα τοῦτο γράφω (Dem.).

(d) Philip will carry out all the projects he desires with the greatest tranquillity μετὰ πλειστής ἡσυχίας ἅπανθ' ὅσα βούλεται Φίλιππος διοικήσεται (Dem.).

(e) What ought the well-affected citizen to have done; he who with all foresight was serving his country? Ought he not to have made Eubœa the shield of Attica? τί χρὴ τὸν εὖνουν πολίτην ποιεῖν, τί τὸν μετὰ πάσης προνοίας ὑπὲρ τῆς πατρίδος πολιτενύμενον; οὐ τὴν Εὐβοίαν προβαλέσθαι τῆς Ἀττικῆς; (Dem.)

(f) I do not at all admit this method, τοῦτον τὸν τρόπον οὐδαμῇ προσίεμαι (Plato).

(g) You must assist cheerfully in the struggle δεῖ ὑμᾶς προθύμως συνάρασθαι τὰ πράγματα (Dem.).

(h) I have spoken fully and frankly and without reserve πάνθ' ἀπλῶς οὐδὲν ὑποστειλάμενος πεπαρησίασμαι (Dem.).

(i) He affects affability and graciousness to all πᾶσιν ἱλεώς τε καὶ πρᾶος εἶναι προσποιεῖται (Plato).

(k) If you deal with them as one you will make a great mistake, but if you treat them as many you will have many allies αἷς ἐὰν μὲν ὡς μιᾷ προσφέρῃ παντὸς ἀν' ἀμάρτοις, ἐὰν δὲ ὡς πολλοῖς, ξυμμάχοις πολλοῖς χρήσει (Plato).

(l) We claim to receive the same return from you παρ' ὑμῶν τὸ αὐτὸ ἀξιοῦμεν κομίζεσθαι (Thuc.).

(m) They make a faulty estimate of freedom κακῶς ὀρίζονται τὸ ἐλεύθερον (Arist. Pol.).

Observe in the above instances: (1) that in all but the two last the verbs are compounded with prepositions, a class of verbs to be carefully noted and employed, as the force of the English can often be rendered in no other way—they are largely used by Demosthenes and Plato; (2) that none of them are Deponents (i.e. verbs which never have an Active form or a Passive sense). There is a distinction, sometimes difficult to trace but still a real distinction, between the sense of the Active and the Middle. In most cases some mental act or state is denoted. Besides the four chief uses of the Middle (F. III.) (a) reflexive, ἐκδύεσθαι to strip, (b) causative, προστρίβεσθαι πληγὰς to get strokes inflicted, (c) appropriative, καταδουλοῦσθαι to enslave, πράττεσθαι to exact, (d) reciprocal διαμάχεσθαι 'to fight each other,' there is a sense¹ which stands half-way between the Middle and Passive, 'to allow oneself to be subjected to this or that,' e.g. ἀπεχθήσει Γοργία 'you will incur the hatred of Gorgias' (Plato, Phil. 58), ταῦτα δὴ ποιούντα ἔτοιμον μᾶλλον ἀπεχθάνεσθαι τοῖς πολίταις; 'is not the obvious result of such a course (Rep. viii. 567) that he gets more and more unpopular?' ἐλασσούμενοι ἐν ταῖς ξυμβολαῖς δίκαις (Thuc. i. 77), 'letting ourselves be curtailed of our due in our contract suits.'

The Passive.

I. There are only two ways by which the agent is usually expressed in Prose. (1) By ὑπό with the genitive. Ἀχιλλεύς ἐπαιδεύθη ὑπὸ Χείρωνος. [ἐκ which is common in Herodotus and the poets is rare in Attic prose. ἀπό, πρός, παρά, διά, are occasionally used instead of ὑπό.]

N.B. ὑπό is used not only after the Passive, but with Active Verbs that are equivalent to Passives; e.g. ἀποθανεῖν ὑπὸ τῆς πόλεως (Lysias).

(2) The Dative alone may also represent the agent, but in prose only with the perfect and pluperfect,—in all their parts; e.g. ἂ ὑπισχνοῦ ἀποτετέλεσται σοι,—τά σοι πεπραγμένα (Dem.). So always with verbals in τέως. (Cf. the use of the dative with the gerundive in Latin.)

II. Observe a peculiarity in Greek Verbs governing a Genitive or Dative, which presents a strong contrast to the Latin idiom. These, too, admit of a personal construction in the Passive; e.g. οἱ μῦθοι καταγελώμενοι τέως (Plato). Παλαμήδης διὰ σοφίαν φθονηθεῖς (Palamedi invidetur). When a verb has two objects in the active (as ἐπιτρέπω to entrust), the question which is to be the subject in the Passive is settled on the following principles: (1) The direct object is preferred to the indirect, i.e. the accusative to the genitive and dative. (2) The personal object is preferred to the thing (C. 79, b).

III. Notice the decisive final imperative of the 3rd Sing. Perfect Passive. μέχρι τοῦδε ὥρισθω ὑμῶν ἡ βραδυτήs (Thuc.) ‘let your tardiness be limited by this,’ ‘go thus far and no farther;’ ταῦτα προειρήσθω (Isocrates) ‘let this have been said once for all by way of introduction.’ ταῦτα πεπαίσθω ἡμῖν (Plato) ‘enough of jest.’

IV. The English Infinitive Passive is often rendered by the Greek Infinitive Active. ἄξιος θαυμάσαι 'worthy to be admired.' ῥάων καταμαθεῖν 'more easily discernible.' χαλεπὸν ποιεῖν, rarely χαλεπὸν ποιεῖσθαι. (The idioms of the two languages are here, however, very similar, as we say, 'fair to see' καλὸς ἰδεῖν, etc.) So in French the active infinitive takes the place of our passive, C'est une faute à éviter 'it is a fault to be avoided (or to avoid).'

V. The Passive is often best translated by converting the sentence; e.g. 'the fleet was accompanied by thirty merchantmen' ξυνέπλεον ὀλκάδες τριάκοντα. 'Poverty is often attended by discontent' τῇ πενίᾳ πολλάκις συμπαρομαρτεῖ ἡ μεμφιμοιρία. 'The judgment of the people was reversed' οἱ πολῖται τὰ δεδογμένα μετέγνωσαν.

VI. The Future Participle Passive is often used with effect; e.g. 'They had beforehand received instructions what they should say' τὰ ῥηθησόμενα πρότερον αὐτοῖς προῦσκειτο (Thuc. viii. 66).

VIII. THE TENSES.

1. The distinction of those that are Primary	Present
	Perfect Future
	Future Perfect
and Historic	Imperfect
	Pluperfect
	Aorist

is most important to bear in mind in the sequence of moods. (See below, Sec. IX.)

2. Practically four Tenses are most required, two in each Class: Present and Future—Imperfect and Aorist.

3. Idioms of the Present which may be introduced.

(a) Its use with πάλαι (like jamdudum), πάλαι ἔρωτῶ 'I have been asking ever so long.'

(b) The Historic Present, for liveliness.

Caution I. Do not translate the house is built, the race is finished, by the present, but by the perfect. The present passive = the present act, not the present state (C. 34).

Caution II. The present infinitive is needed in indirect discourse (a) to translate our was, e.g. 'He said the army was fighting' ἔφη τὸ στράτευμα μάχεσθαι. 'He said Nicias was general' ἔφη Νικίαν στρατηγεῖν (for στρατηγεῖ in direct discourse). But also (b) to translate the imperfect of direct discourse it = a strictly imperfect infinitive, 'I say this ought not to have escaped me' τοῦτ' ἐγὼ φημι δεῖν ἐμὲ μὴ λαθεῖν (where δεῖν represents ἔδει).

4. Idioms of the Future.

(a) οὐ λαλήσεις ; = λάλησον, οὐ μὴ λαλήσεις = μὴ λαλήσης.

- (b) With ὅπως, by an ellipse of some word like ὄρα or σκόπει, ὅπως ἄνδρες ἕσσεσθε,—ὅπως μηδὲν ἐρεῖς.
- (c) The Future Infinitive after verbs of hoping, expecting, promising, is the regular construction.¹
- (d) Future Participles to express a purpose.

Caution. 'He wishes to do' = βούλεται ποιεῖν (or ποιῆσαι), not ποιήσεν. The future is only so used when reference to the future is very marked. (Thucydides is partial to it.)

5. Idioms of the Imperfect.

1. Tentative. ὁ δὲ (i.e. Cleon) ἀνεχώρει—ὑπέφευγε—ἐξανεχώρει 'he tried to back out of what he had said' (Thuc. iv. 23). Read the whole chapter, which well exemplifies this use of the Imperfect. Render thus such expressions as 'tried to,' 'began to,' 'proceeded to,' 'attempted to.'

2. Iterative. 'Kept on doing,' esp. with ἄν. καὶ γὰρ ἂν αἱ ἀποστάσεις πρὸς ὑμᾶς ἐγίνοντο.

3. Corrective, esp. with ἄρα. ἄρ' οὐ τόδε ἦν τὸ δένδρον; 'is not this after all the tree?'

¹ These verbs, however, are also often used with the Present or Aorist Infinitive : e.g.

1. ἐλπίζει δυνατόν εἶναι ἔρχεσθαι—Plato, Rep. ix. 573.
2. ἠλπίζον χειρῶσασθαι—Thuc. iv. 29.
3. ὁπέσχετό μοι βουλευσασθαι—Xen. An. i. 2.

4. With an ellipse of ἄν. εἰκὸς ἦν, ἐχρήν, ἔδει, ὠφελον, καλὸν ἦν, καιρὸς ἦν, etc. Cf. æquius erat for esset, and in English 'it were better.'

Caution.—Never use the Imperfect unless there is some special reason for it. The ordinary tense in narrative is the Aorist.—To appreciate the force of this tense and to use it properly is to have made no slight progress in writing Greek.

Passages where the Imperfect and the Aorist are used together: ἃ ἐπράσσετο οὐκ ἐγένετο (Thuc. vi. 74) 'what was attempted did not happen.' ἐν Κῷ ἡ δημοκρατία μετέβαλε καὶ ἐν Ρόδῳ· οἱ γὰρ δημαγωγοὶ ἐκώλυον ἀποδιδόναι τὰ ὀφειλόμενα τοῖς τριηράρχοις (Ar. Pol. v. 5) 'the democracy changed, for the demagogues were hindering the payments due.' ψιλοὶ δώδεκα ἀνέβαινον, ὧν ἡγείτο Ἀμμέας καὶ πρῶτος ἀνέβη (Thuc. iii. 22) 'twelve men lightly equipped proceeded to go up, led by Ammeas, who then and there got up first.'

What is a rapid, complete, momentary, transient, single act is denoted.

• Goodwin quotes from Appian, ἦλθον, εἶδον, ἐνέκησα, Veni, vidi, vici. Hence the distinction in prohibitions between the Present Imperative, μὴ ποίει τοῦτο do not do this (continually), μὴ ποιήσης τοῦτο do not do this (single act).

6. Special Idioms of the Aorist.

1. Its use apart from all time; almost equivalent to the Future, δύ' ὀβόλους ἐπράξατο 'it charges in each case two obols,' and so, iterative, and when used with the present, denoting intermittent recurrence (C).

2. The conversational idiom to dismiss a subject as done with, in ἤσθην, ἐπήνεσα, etc., ἔμαθον, 'that was clear.'

[For this and for the whole treatment of the Aorist see Donaldson, 427, and Clyde, 38; 'the end view of an act as opposed to the full-length view of the present and imperfect.']

Caution.—Never translate the English 'have' by the Aorist; but the English 'had' will sometimes be so rendered, e.g. after ἐπελ, ἐπειδή, ὥς, πρὶν,—'when he had died' ἐπειδή ἐτελεύτησε. In Conditional Sentences always translate had in the apodosis by the Aorist, never by the Pluperfect.

The Tenses least required are the Perfect, Pluperfect, Future Perfect.

Observe on the two last

- (a) That the Pluperfect may be required where its sense is disguised in an English passage, e.g. 'the treaty was on the point of being broken,' i.e. had almost been broken, αἱ σπονδαὶ ὀλίγου διελέλυντο.

In the case of Perfects with a present sense, denoting an abiding result, e.g. δέδοικα (δέδια) I am afraid, κέκτημαι I possess, κεκλημαι I am called, etc., the Pluperfect of course = the Imperfect (M. 112).

(b) The substitutes for the Future Perfect are the Future and the Aorist subjunctive after conjunctions ending in -αν.

(c) Permanence and immediate action are denoted by the Future Perfect Passive (paulo-post).

The Tense distinctions exist mainly in the Indicative. The Future Infinitive and Future Optative [for the latter see below No. XIII., Or. Obliqua, ii.] are almost the only exceptions.

If it be asked how do the Present and Aorist in the other Moods (which practically are the only tenses so used) differ from each other, the answer is,—they bear the same relation to each other as we have seen that the Imperfect and Aorist Indicative do to each other (see Clyde, 40, and Summary, p. 233), e.g. λαβὲ τὰς μαρτυρίας καὶ ἀναγίνωσκε take and set about reading (a process); λαβὲ καὶ ἀνάγνωθι take and read the depositions (a single act); εἶθε μὴ τοῦτο πάσχοιεν (habitually); εἶθε μὴ πάθοιεν (in a single case).

This leads us to remark on a few idioms of

IX. THE MOODS.

The Subjunctive Mood.—Remember that this Mood includes the Subjunctive Group and the Optative Group, or in other words, that the Optative is the Subjunctive of the Past Tenses. Do not be misled to forget this by the misnomer Optative (wishing), which only expresses one of its functions. Hence the rule for the Sequence of Moods in dependent final Sentences, that Primary Tenses are followed by Subjunctive (ἐρχομαι ἵνα ἴδω); Historical Tenses are followed by Optative (ἦλθεν ἵνα ἴδοι); the Subjunctive answering to the Latin present subjunctive (may); the Optative answering to the Latin imperfect subjunctive (might).

The exceptions however are important and characteristic of the love of vividness and dramatic effect in the Greek mind.

1. The Future Indicative is far more common than the Subjunctive with ὅπως and ὅπως μή after one class of Verbs, i.e. those of striving, taking care to effect anything, e.g.

ὦρα βουλευέσθαι ὅπως ὥς κάλλιστα ἀγωνιούμεθα.

(Xen. Anab. iv. 6.)

σκοπεῖ, ὅπως μὴ ἕξαρνος ἔσει ἂ νῦν λέγεις.

(Plato, Euth.)

'Unless wariness be used, as good almost kill a man as kill a good book' (Milton).

εὐλαβητέον ὅπως μὴ βιβλίον τι χρηστὸν δλοῦμεν, σχεδόν τι γὰρ ταῦτόν τῳ ἄνθρωπον.

(After other verbs, in pure final clauses this use is rare.)

2. The Subjunctive often follows the Historic Tenses: τρία μέρη ἐκλήρωσαν—ἵνα ἀπορῶσιν (Thuc. vi. 42). [Read this chapter, in which three instances occur.]

The following are only apparent exceptions—

3. The Historic Present is followed by the Optative.

4. The Gnostic Aorist expressing a general truth is followed by the Subjunctive,—as it is a primary tense.

* Observe the peculiarly Attic construction of ἵνα (less frequently in prose of ὥς and ὅπως) with the past tenses of the Indicative, to express what might have happened, but is now past the possibility of happening. ἐχρήν συγχωρεῖν ἵνα συνουσία ἐγίνετο 'you ought to have given way, that so a conversation might have been taking place.'

That this belongs to final and not consequential sentences is proved by the use of μή, and not οὐ, when they are negative.

Distinct from pure final sentences such as the above, but similar, are object clauses with ὅπως and ὅπως μή, e.g. τοῦτο παρασκευάζει or τούτου ἐπιμελεῖται, ὅπως γενήσεται.

So far as (besides expressing the verbs' direct object, τούτου) they imply the purpose of the leading verb, they partake of the nature of final clauses.

The two may be combined, as σπουδάζει (τούτο) ὅπως πλουτήσῃ (τούτου ἕνεκα), ἵνα τοὺς φίλους εὖ ποιῇ (G. 43).

Variety in writing Greek Prose may be gained by observing and employing these forms.

We may here ask what is the construction in Greek of Verbs meaning to advise, ask, entreat, command, forbid, etc. (all which in Latin take ut).

They present a marked contrast to the Latin, being regularly followed by the Infinitive. e.g. παραινούν σοι πείθεσθαι—δέομαι ὑμῶν συγγνώμην ἔμοι ἔχειν—ἐκέλευσεν αὐτὸν περιμεῖναι—ἀπαγορεύει αὐτοῖς μὴ τοῦτο ποιεῖν.

Sometimes, however, they take ὅπως or ὅπως μή following the construction of verbs of striving, e.g. παραγγέλλει ὅπως μὴ ἔσονται. ἵνα is never so used (see below on Hellenistic words, No. XXII.).

Notice the elliptical use of ὅπως with the 2nd person Future, with σκόπει understood :

ὅπως ἄνδρες ἴσασθε 'prove yourselves men.'

(ὅπως μή also takes the Subj.¹ in this case.)

In passing from Final and Object Clauses with Conjunctions to

X. RELATIVE CLAUSES,

Observe that the Greeks have many ways of expressing a purpose—for there is also the Infinitive and the Participle [XIV. XV.]—though one of the commonest forms in Latin, given immediately below, is not used in Greek.

I. Do not be misled by the familiar 'legatos mittit qui nuntient' to use the Relative with the Subjunctive in Greek.

Rule.—When relative words (ὅς, ὅστις, ὅθεν, ὅπόθεν) introduce a final clause, they are not followed by the Subjunctive but by the Future Indicative, e.g.

πρεσβείαν πέμπει ἢ διδάξει ταῦτα (Dem.) (Mittit legatos qui doceant.)

οὐδὲν προσδεόμεθα Ὅμηρου ὅστις τέρψει (Thuc.)
(Nihil opus est Homero qui nos delectet.)

τέχνη ἥτις σε ποιήσει μέγα δύνασθαι (Plato) (Ars quæ efficiat ut multum valeas.)

οὐκ ἔστι χρήματα ὅπόθεν ἐκτίσω (Plato) (Deest pecunia qua mulctam persolvam.)

¹ The 2nd Aorist in preference to the 1st.

This Future Indicative is even retained after Historic Tenses, and seldom changed into the Fut. Opt. (except in indirect questions).

Similarly a Present Indicative is used, παρ' ἐμοὶ οὐδεὶς μισθοφορεῖ ὅστις μὴ ἱκανὸς ἐστὶν ἴσα ποιεῖν ἐμοί (nemo qui non possit).

* The Attic exception ἔχει ὅτι εἶπῃ 'he has something to say,' is formed on the analogy of οὐκ ἔχει ὅτι εἶπῃ, which = an indirect question [i.e. the direct question would be in the Subjunctive to begin with, τί εἶπῃ; 'what should he say?'] being a question of doubt, and remaining in the Subjunctive when expressed indirectly.]

II. Relatives and Relative Particles, with ἄν.—Translate our suffix ever in whoever, whosoever, whatever, whensoever, wheresoever [not frequentative, but = be it when it may] by ὅς ἄν, ὅστις ἄν, ἑάν, ὅταν, ὅπότεν, ἐπειδάν, ὅπου ἄν. Other equivalents, which give the idea of indefiniteness, as, 'be they of what kind, or size, or number they may,' are so rendered by οἷος ἄν, ὅσος ἄν, ἡλικὸς ἄν, always with the subjunctive.

N.B.—Where these Relative words occur with the Opt., the force of the ἄν is thrown on the verb, and there is no such indefinite notion of ever. (See Farrar, 188.)

III. Causal Relatives.—‘Inasmuch as he,’ ‘one who,’ ‘because,’ may be rendered by the relatives ὅς, ὅστις, ὃς γὰρ, with a verb in the Indicative, e. g.—

θauμαστὸν ποιεῖς ὃς ἡμῖν οὐδὲν δίδως.

ὅστις, ὃ κατάρτατε, περὶ πλείονος φάλῃ τοὺς κακούργους ποιούμενος τῆς πατρίδος.

οὐδέποτε ἂν εἴη ἡ ῥητορικὴ ἄδικον πρᾶγμα, ὃ γὰρ ἀεὶ περὶ δικαιοσύνης τοὺς λόγους ποιεῖται ‘when (or, inasmuch as) all the speeches it makes are about justice.’

Equivalents for this meaning are ἅτε, ἅτε δὴ, οἷα δὴ, ὥς, with participles.

Here again notice the difference between the idiom of Greek and Latin, where quippe qui, cum, ut qui, utpote qui, expressing causation, take the subjunctive.

Is μή or οὐ to be used with these relatives?—‘Ordinarily οὐ, but if a conditional is combined with a causal force, then μή.’ Goodwin. e.g.—ταλαίπωρος εἰ ᾧ μή θεοὶ πατρῶοί εἰσι ‘if, as appears, you have no ancestral gods.’

Observe how much less Relatives are used in Greek than in Latin : (a) in linking sentences they are but little employed ; (b) they are never repeated, as they are in a succession of clauses in Latin. The Participle is far more common, e.g., ‘Trust me who know well’ πίστευσον ἔμοι εὖ εἰδότε, not ὃς εὖ οἶδα.

Still the use of the Relative is very considerable in forming periphrases, e.g.—

The additional wants of the citizens

ὧν προσδέονται οἱ πολῖται.

The precepts of Epicurus οἷα ἐδίδασκον οἱ ἀμφὶ Ἐπικούρου.

All the excesses committed in a civil war

ὅσα ἂν παρανομοῖεν ἄνδρες στάσιάζοντες.

The schemes of the enemy

ὅσα μηχανῶνται οἱ πολέμιοι.

Variety is thus given to a sentence, which in English contains a succession of substantives. Notice, too, such constructions as ἀμήχανον ὅσον χρόνον, an inconceivable length of time.

XI. TEMPORAL SENTENCES.

The various ways in which Time is marked in Greek are given in Clyde (§ 46. 92, and p. 235).

1. ὅτε and ἡνίκα are chiefly used of contemporary acts, and are mostly followed by a correlative τότε. Use in general ὥς, ἐπεὶ, ἐπειδή, with the indicative = Latin cum, postquam. With τάχιστα they = cum primum. The participle with the finite verb (ταῦτα εἰπὼν ἀπῆγε) is constantly used, and also the genitive absolute.

2. Notice and employ the regular form for frequentative sentences—ὅποτε with Opt., followed by Imperfect Ind.—e. g.

ὅποτε ἀποσταῖν, ἀπειροὶ ἐς πόλεμον καθίσταντο (Thuc. i. 99).

‘Whenever they revolted, they always found themselves unprepared for war.’

ὅποτε αἰσθοῖτό τι παρὰ καιρὸν αὐτοὺς ὕβρει θαρσύντας κατέπλησσεν (Thuc. ii. 65).

‘Whenever he (Pericles) perceived them insolently and unseasonably confident, he used to beat them down.’

Similarly, ἃ μετὰ χεῖρας ἔχοι καὶ ἐξηγήσασθαι οἷός τε ἦν (Thuc. i. 138)

‘Whatever he (Themistocles) chanced to have in hand, he could also expound.’

εἴ τις καὶ ἀντίποι ἐτεθνήκει (where ἐτεθνήκει is an imperfect) (Thuc. viii. 60)

‘Whenever any one refused he was put to death.’

Obs. The English as = ‘as often as,’ will often have to be so rendered. ‘There was a deep and heavy silence over the whole city, broken only by the robbers as they forced open the houses’ (ὅποτε τοιχωρῦχοιεν) (Milman).

To the list of conjunctions given under this head in Clyde, add ἐπειδή, e. g. ἐπειδὴ δὲ ἀνοιχθείη, εἰσήμεν παρὰ Σωκράτη (Plato).

Caution.—Never use ὅταν for ‘when,’ only for ‘whenever.’

3. ἕως. πρίν. πρίν ἄν.

Translate whilst by ἕως (or ἐν ᾧ) with Primary tenses of the Indicative.

ἕως καθεύδει, ἕως ἔτι φῶς ἐστί.

While, so long as, as long as ever, with the notion of because, by ἕως ἄν with Subj.

ὁμολογίαν δὲ ἐκ διαφερομένων, ἕως ἂν διαφέρωνται ἀδύνατον εἶναι (Plato, Symp. 187).

Until, of past events, by ἕως or πρίν with past tenses of Indic.

ἡδέως ἂν διελεγόμην ἕως ἀπέδωκα ῥῆσιν (Plato, Gorg. 506).

οὐκ ἐπαύσαντο . . . πρίν ἐξημίωσαν (of Pericles) (Thuc. ii. 65).

Until, of future events, by ἕως ἄν, μέχρις ἄν, ἕστ’ ἄν, πρίν ἄν, with Subj. (the last only after negative clauses).

λέγω πάντας ἐξίέναι κατὰ μέρος, ἕως ἂν στρατεύσῃσθε (Dem. Ol. ii. 27) (until all of you shall have taken the field.)

οὐκ ἄπεισι πρίν ἂν δῶ δίκην.

Before that, after positive clauses, by πρίν with Infinitive.

ἀπέδωκε πρίν ἕξ μῆνας γεγονέναι (before six months had elapsed) (Plato, Prot. 320).

Obs. These words may be constructed with the Optative,

(a) when dependent on an Historic tense.

ἀπηγόρευε μηδένα βάλλειν πρὶν Κῦρος ἐμπλησθῇ θηρῶν.

σπονδὰς ἐποιήσαντο, ἕως ἀπαγγελθείη τὰ λεχθέντα.

(b) In Oratio Obliqua.

Cautions.—I. Never use πρὶν ἄν but when a negative precedes. πρὶν with Infinitive may always be used, but is less common with negative sentences.

II. Avoid πρὶν ἤ in Attic Prose.

III. Avoid both ἕως, and πρὶν with Subj. without ἄν.

XII. CONDITIONAL SENTENCES.

The four classes of Conditional Sentences which express (I.) Possibility, (II.) Slight Probability, (III.) Complete Uncertainty, (IV.) Impossibility, must be mastered from any good grammar. The following are—

I. Sentences (of each class) really conditional, but the conditional character of which is more or less disguised in English, or where it is doubtful to which class they belong.

(a) ‘Granting as you say.’ ‘Assuming that the story is fabulous, it is still right to mention it.'

εἰ μυθωδὴς ὁ λόγος, ὁμῶς αὐτῷ ῥηθῆναι προσήκει.

- (b) 'Should this happen.' 'Whomsoever he sees,' or 'as often as he sees them.' 'Man when he takes upon himself to judge of Providence.' εἰάν with Subj.

Obs. Our ambiguous 'if he wishes' may = 'if he shall wish,' and so come under this head, or = 'if he now wishes, and come under (a).

- (c) 'Were he to go.' 'Take away (i.e. if you were to take away) concord, and the state will shortly be dissolved.' εἰ with Opt. followed by Opt. with ἄν. 'In case that,' 'supposing that.' εἰ ἐπιβουλοῖεν, ἐχώρουν 'they marched in case they should come to their aid.' The apodosis here is not ἐχώρουν, but is a suppressed one, 'that they might meet them in case they should come' (G.). Notice that a sentence precisely similar in appearance might mean 'whenever.' See above (XI. 2.).

- (d) 'Had not you committed that error, the world would never have known what you were' εἰ μὴ τοῦτο ἡμάρτες οὐδέποτε ἂν οἶος εἰ τοῖς ἅπασιν ἐξείδεξας.—'Had he not resembled my father as he slept, I had done't' (Lady Macbeth).—'I should have fainted but for his presence' ἀπεῖπον ἂν εἰ μὴ ἐκεῖνος παρῆν. 'There were an end of me, did I not believe,' etc. ἀπωλλύμην ἂν εἰ μὴ ἐπίστευον.

II. Sentences not really conditional, but apparently

so. Gibbon's favourite use of if (= 'while on the one hand,' or 'although') is an instance of this, e.g. 'They had been taught by experience that if merit sometimes provoked the jealousy, error or even guilt would obtain the indulgence of a gracious emperor' (ch. xlii.). 'I wonder if he will come,' where if = 'whether.'

III. Substitutes for the conditional form. 'If (or provided) they had not to fight, it were far easier to march uphill' = πολλὰ ῥᾶον ὄρθιον ἀμαχεῖ ἵεναι. Here a protasis is implied in the Adverb ἀμαχεῖ. The protasis may also be expressed by a participle without article (ἔχων τι = εἰ ἔχει, εἰ δὲ ἔχη, etc.),—or by the genitive absolute, 'if this bill be rejected' τοῦτου τοῦ προβουλευματος ἀποψηφισθέντος,—or by a relative with an indefinite antecedent, ἃ ἔχει δίδωσι = εἰ τι ἔχει (ἃ ἂν ἔχη = εἰάν τι ἔχη, ἃ ἔχοι = εἰ τι ἔχοι, ἃ εἴχεν or ἔσχεν = εἰ τι εἴχεν or ἔσχεν). Also ἕως ἄν sometimes = if. ἕως ἄν ἀνὴρ δίκαιος ᾧ, οὐποτ' ἐπιλήσομαι τούτων (Xen.).

IV. The commonest form of apodosis is the Opt. with ἄν, as being the most courteous (see below, No. XXIII. Attic Politeness). The form with the imperfect, εἰ ἔλεγεν, ἡμάρτανεν ἄν, is also a favourite form, owing to the Greek love of dramatic vividness.

✓ V. Remember that εἰ, besides being a conditional particle, has two other distinct uses. (1) = ὅτι with θαυμάζω, ἤδομαι, etc. [See below, No. XXIII. Attic Politeness.] (2) In indirect questions = 'whether,' ἤρετο εἴ τις εἶη σοφώτερος.

VI. For minuter distinctions, instances of suppressed protasis and apodosis, and combinations which vary the regular construction, see Goodwin, ch. iv. sec. 2. Farrar, 204-214.

XIII. ORATIO OBLIQUA.

Indirect discourse, reported speeches or questions. The rules for these are less rigid in Greek than in Latin, from (a) the far more important part which the Latin relative plays [see above, X.], and the care required in using it in subordinate clauses; (b) the greater simplicity with which questions are reported; (c) the greater latitude generally in the choice of moods employed. These are—

- I. The Indicative.
- II. The Optative.
- III. The Infinitive.

[The Participle may also be used, e.g. ἀγγέλλει αὐτοὺς ἐλθόντας.]

I. The Indicative after ὅτι and ὥς. After Primary tenses there is no change from the direct form, except that of the person.

After Historic Tenses use the Indicative in preference to the Optative in the following cases, (1) if stress is laid on the reality of the fact, or (2) on the original form in which a question was put, or (3) if any part of the sentence is specially emphasised; e.g. Pelopidas said they alone had aided the king at Plataea ἔλεγεν ὅτι μόνοι βασιλεῖ συνεμάχοντο ἐν Πλαταιαῖς (Xen.).

ἡπόρουν, τί ποτε λέγει for ὃ τι λέγοι (Plato).

ἦκε δ' ἀγγέλλων τις ὥς Ἑλάτεια κατεῖληπται (Dem.).

Use the Indicative, too, in a dependent sentence, if ambiguity is thereby avoided; e.g. ἔλεγεν ὅτι δοίῃ αὐτῷ εἶχε.

II. Use the Optative (a) in general after Historic Tenses. When it occurs in the same passage with the Indicative, the latter draws attention to the essential part of the statement, or to what is fact, as distinguished from what is possible or conceivable; e.g. ἔθαύμασαν ὅποι τρέψονται καὶ τί ἐν νῶ ἔχοιεν, and the oft-quoted ὅτι Κῦρος τέθνηκεν, Ἀριαῖος δὲ πεφευγὼς εἶη. (b) (as well as the Indicative) in indirect questions: ἡρώτων αὐτὸν εἰ ἀναπλεύσειεν. (c) if an Optative has preceded, repeat it even in a parenthesis, particularly when introduced by γάρ, e.g. ἔλεγον ὅτι παντὸς ἀξία λέγοι Σεύθης· χειμῶν γὰρ εἶη.

Observe the use of the Future Optative (this mood of the Future is restricted to indirect discourse); ἔφη ὅτι ἡ ὁδὸς ἔσοιτο πρὸς βασιλέα.

III. The Infinitive can always be used instead of ὅτι or ὥς, with the same tenses as were used in the direct form. It must be used to express indirectly (a) the Imperative ; (b) the apodosis of a conditional sentence.

The latter peculiarity, and some of the other points to be noticed in the Oratio Obliqua, are illustrated by the following passage :—

‘ He considered, he said, as great criminals, those who by personal ambition compromised the small amount of stability secured by the constitution ; that if the constitution contained defects and dangers, the assembly was competent to expose them to the eyes of the country ; but that he alone, bound by his oath, restrained himself within the strict limits traced by the act ’ (Kinglelake).

ᾤετο γὰρ μέγιστα παρανομεῖν, τοὺς δι’ ἰδίαν τινὰ φιλοτιμίαν προειμένους τὸ μόνιον τοῦτο ὅτι δῆποτε εἴη τῆς ἀσφαλείας ὅπερ ὑπὸ τῆς πολιτείας ἡγγυημένον εἶη· εἰ μὲν γὰρ τῇ πολιτείᾳ σαθρόν τι ἢ ἐπικίνδυνον ἐνείη, τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ ἐξεῖναι ταῦτα πᾶσι φανερὰ ποιῆσαι, αὐτὸς δὲ ἅτε ἐνορκος ὦν ἐμμένειν ὑπ’ ἀνάγκης τοῖς ἀπλῶς καὶ διαρρήδην ὑπὸ τοῦ νόμου διωρισμένοις.

as all know

IV. Is then the Subjunctive not to be used at all in Oratio Obliqua ?

Ans.—It is retained when it would have been used in the Oratio Recta, and only used then.

E.g. φημι αὐτὸν, ἐὰν τοῦτο λέξη ἀμαρτάνειν, where the Oratio Recta would have been ἐὰν τοῦτο λέξη ἀμαρτάνει.

XIV. THE INFINITIVE.

The Infinitive and the Participle are among the most flexible parts of the Verb, and a command of their idioms is essential for writing Greek Prose.

The Infinitive. We have already mentioned (I. 8) its substantival use in combination with the Article. How far may it be so used without the Article? Ans. Only in the Nom. (οὐχ ἡδὺ πολλοὺς ἐχθροὺς ἔχειν) —and Acc. when not governed by a Preposition. In this construction the tenses of the Infinitive cease to represent time. (See on this Clyde, 45.)

Notice and employ its uses :

(1) With Adjectives, limiting and completing their sense ; e.g. οἷος, οἷός τε.—‘ Your minds are too abject to endure ’ ταπεινὴ ὑμῶν ἡ διάνοια ἐγκαρτερεῖν,—‘ too few to aid ’ ὀλίγας ἀμύνειν,—‘ quick in devising novelties ’ ὀξεῖς ἐπινοῆσαι,—‘ a very weighty speaker ’ πιθανώτατος λέγειν. So too, like the Latin supine, χαλεπὸν ποιεῖν difficile factu ; ῥάων καταμαθεῖν faciliior intellectu.

(2) To express a purpose: τὴν πόλιν φυλάττειν αὐτοῖς παρέδωκεν, also with τοῦ. Cf. ‘ Evil shall hunt the wicked person to overthrow him.’

(3) A result expected or actual, with ὥστε.

(4) The subject of the Infinitive is in the Accusative, with one very important exception, i.e. when the subject of the principal verb is also the subject of the Infinitive, it stands for both, and words in apposition are in the Nominative. οὐκ ἔφη αὐτὸς ἀλλ' ἐκείνον στρατηγεῖν is the simplest instance of this. But without the emphatic αὐτός, and even with ὥστε, the rule prevails.

1. οὐκ ἦγετο μᾶλλον ὑπ' αὐτοῦ ἢ αὐτὸς ἦγε διὰ τὸ μὴ κτώμενος—τὴν δύναμιν πρὸς ἡδονὴν τι λέγειν. (Thuc. ii. 65.)
2. ἀντιτάξασθε πρὸς τὸ διὰ τὴν ἦσαν δεδιέναι τὸ ἀπαράσκευοι τότε τυχεῖν. (Thuc. ii. 87.)
3. ἐνόμισαν εἰ παρακαλούμενος ὥστε τὰ ὁμοῖα πονοῦντες τῶν αὐτῶν τυγχάνειν κ. τ. λ. (Xen. Cyr. ii. 1.)

(See Appendix, No. X. 1. 7.)

(5) Notice such adverbial uses of the Infinitive as ὡς ἔπος εἰπεῖν, ὡς συνελόντι εἰπεῖν, ὀλίγου δεῖν, τὸ νῦν εἶναι, and with negatives, ἐκὼν εἶναι.

*for to-day
for the present*

XV. THE PARTICIPLE.

While the force of the Infinitive is substantival, that of the Participle is more adjectival. The Participle resembles the Infinitive in this, that when the subject of the Participle is the same as the subject of the principal clause, the participle is in the Nominative; e.g. οἶδα θνητὸς εἶναι (but with σύνουδα and συγγινώσκω the Dative may also be used). But on the other hand, with many verbs, the sense given by the same verb is often widely different, according as Participle or Infinitive is joined to it. Typical instances are φαίνομαι εἶναι and εἶναι 'I appear to be,' and 'I plainly am,' αἰσχύνομαι λέγειν 'I am ashamed to say it' (and therefore don't), αἰσχ. λέγων 'I am ashamed while I say it' [Numerous examples are given in Clyde, 46, c. and Farrar, 239. See, too, Jebb on Ajax, 507.]

Notice—

(1) Our English Infinitive is often to be rendered by the Participle. They were said to have fled ἡγγέλθησαν ἀποφυγόντες, he continues to love me διατελεῖ με ἀγαπῶν.

(2) Some uses of the Participle have already been mentioned. Purpose [VIII. 4, d.], Cause [X. III.], Condition [XII. III.]. With the first two ὥς is much used. Other important senses are Means, e.g. 'by or through practice' μελετῶντες, like the Latin gerund: Instrument, and in short any attendant circumstances. Remember then where we use Adverbs, the Greeks often use Participles.

Some idiomatic uses of ἔχω, τυγχάνω, λανθάνω, φθάνω in this connection are given below [No. XX.]. Add to these—

He did it at first	ἀρχόμενος
„ at last	τελευτῶν
„ after an interval	διαλιπὼν
I will speak attentively	κατατείνας ἑρῶ.

(3) Of the cases used absolutely with the Participle the Genitive and Accusative are most required ; the latter chiefly with the impersonal δέον, δόξαν, προσήκον, ἐξόν, when it was right, was decreed, was fitting, when you had the opportunity. Also εἰρημένον and ἀδύνατον, ἄδηλον, αἰσχροὺν ὄν. The Acc. Abs. is often used with ὡς (i.e. thinking that). To denote a state of the weather, the ellipse in ὕοντος ‘when it was raining’ (sc. Διός) seems unique, though a similar ellipse of the noun is found, e.g. σαλπίζοντος.

(4) Cautions :—

- i. Do not render he halted and resumed his march by two finite verbs, but ἐπιστὰς ἀνεσκέυσατο. (Notice the great advantage over Latin that the active past participle gives the Greek language.) καταγελασθὲν ἠφανίσθη (Thuc.) ‘was laughed down and disappeared.’
- ii. Do not turn literally such a sentence as ‘By what name would one call you to address you properly?’ but by τί ἂν εἰπὼν σε τίς ὁρθῶς προσείποι; Our principal clause (or leading idea) becomes a participle. So λογίσασθε πόσον πολεμεῖτε χρόνον Φιλίππῳ καὶ τί ποιοῦν-των ἡμῶν ὁ χρόνος διελήλυθεν οὗτος (Olynth. ii.) 'consider how long you have been at war with Philip, and what you have been doing while all this time has elapsed.' καίπερ οὕτω πρατούσης φιλοσοφίας, τὸ ἀξίωμα μεγαλοπρεπέστερον λείπεται, οὐ δὴ ἐφιέμενοι πολλοὶ ἀτελεῖς μὲν τὰς φύσεις κ. τ. λ. (Resp. 495) 'although philosophy be in this evil case, there still remains a dignity about her, and many are thus attracted by her whose natures are imperfect.' (Jowett.)

Notice that in each case the participle εἰπών, ποιούντων, ἐφιέμενοι, contains the principal or leading idea.

- iii. Beware of using καίπερ with anything but a Participle. (Use καίτοι with a finite Verb.)
Other Adverbs used with Participles are μεταξύ, ἅμα, εὐθύς, αὐτίκα, ἐξαίφνης, ἄτε, οἷα.

The following rendering of a passage in Swift exemplifies some of the chief uses of the Participle, and shows how much more frequently it is employed in Greek than in English: 'I have not come to recount to you the dangers you must run in the course of a civil war, though they are very dreadful. I have shown you very plainly that if you should be deluded to take arms, you fight for less than nothing, for the undoing of yourselves and families; and if this argument will not prevail upon you to be quiet, I can only pray God for you,' etc. ἀλλ οὐ γὰρ ἡκὼ καταλέξων ὑμῖν ὅσα στασιάζοντες ἂν κινδυνεύοιτε καίπερ ὄντα φοβερώτατα· ἐδήλωσα δὲ καὶ μάλ' ἐναργῶς ἦν πεισθέντες πόλεμον αἰρησθε, περὶ ἐλάσσονος ἢ τοῦ μηδενὸς τὸν ἀγῶνα ὑμῖν ἐσόμενον, ἔσται γὰρ δῆπου περὶ τοῦ αὐτοῦς τε καὶ τοὺς προσήκοντας ἀπολωλέναι. ἦν δ' ἐμοὶ ταῦτα προῖσχομένῳ ἡσυχάζειν μὴ πεισθῆτε, ἤδη λείπεται μόνον εὐχεσθαι τῷ θεῷ ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν κ. τ. λ.

XVI. PERSONAL AND IMPERSONAL CONSTRUCTIONS.

I. The principal Impersonal Verbs fall under the following classes : those denoting

(a) The state of the weather : ὕει, νίφει, βροντᾷ.

(b) Propriety, possibility : δεῖ, χρή, προσήκει, ἔξεστι, ἐνδέχεται, ἐγχωρεῖ, φύσιν or δίκην ἔχει.

(c) Circumstances : καλῶς ἔχει, μέλει, μεταμέλει, πολλοῦ or ὀλίγου δεῖ, προχωρεῖ μοι it is going on successfully (i.e. I am succeeding).

(d) Appearance, 'it seems,' and with an Infinitive, resolution, 'it seems good,' δοκεῖ. So ἔοικε and δηλοῖ.

Notice in the construction of these that an Accusative may be used when an Infinitive follows ; e.g. ἔξεστι σε εὐδαίμονα γενέσθαι.

II. Some verbs take both personal and impersonal constructions ; e.g. συμβαίνει, δοκεῖ, ἀγγέλλομαι (ἡγ-γέλθῃ ἡ μάχῃ ἰσχυρὰ γεγονέναι, καὶ πολλοὺς τεθνάναι).

But

III. Greek, as a rule, prefers the personal construction.

(1) ὥς ἔοικας in a parenthesis, οὐκ ἐπαινέτης εἰ, ὥς ἔοικας, τῶν τοιούτων ἀνδρῶν (Plato).

(2) With ὄφελον, and with δίκαιος, ἄξιος, ἀμήχανος, δῆλος, φανερός, ἐπιτήδειος, δυνατός, ἐπίδοξος.—e.g. ἐπίδοξος γενέσθαι ἐπιεικής (Plato) 'it is likely he will do well.' Here, however, our idiom 'he is likely to do well' coincides with the Greek.

Translate—

'It is the right of an enemy to avail himself of advantages' by οἱ πολέμιοι δίκαιοι εἰσι χρῆσθαι τοῖς καιρίοις.

'It was fitting that he should be put to death' ἐπιτήδειος ἦν τεθνάναι.

'It is unpleasant to associate with them' χαλεποὶ εἰσι συγγενέσθαι.

'It is natural for man to sin' πεφύκασιν ἄνθρωποι ἁμαρτάνειν.

XVII. NEGATIVES.

To appreciate the all-important distinction between οὐ and μή (and their compounds)—the distinction, i.e., between a fact (external to this or that particular mind) and a thought or supposition about anything (as to the reality of which nothing is stated)—the broad difference that while οὐ denies absolutely, expressing that 'it is not,' μή expresses 'one thinks it is not'—

I. Study carefully the excellent instances of their use in Farrar, 274–295, and Clyde, 48.

II. Always ask yourself in reading any Greek author, Why is this οὐ rather than μή, or μή rather than οὐ? and do not be satisfied unless you can bring the passage under some definite rule for their use. And in composition ask yourself,—What is the idea in the English which I am going to render? What is the general character of the whole paragraph, and of its component sentences? Is it a fact that I have to translate, or a concept? Is there a wish or a condition, a prohibition or a purpose? Are there relatives used indefinitely or vague abstract terms of a negative character, such as 'dishonourable,' 'invisible,'—or uncertain indications of place or time? Does a question expect an answer in the negative, as, 'He is not dead, is he?' In all such cases as these last μή must be employed. It largely supplements in Greek the finer uses of the Latin Subjunctive.

It may be as well, however, to draw attention to a few uses of the negative, some obvious and simple enough, but yet often missed by beginners, others presenting somewhat more difficulty.

Observe the fondness of the Greeks for negatives, and their apparent redundancy in some cases. By this tendency to accumulate negatives, Farrar suggests that we may perhaps explain the use of οὐ μή with 2nd Person of Fut. Ind. as a strong prohibition. οὐκ οὖν καλεῖς αὐτὸν καὶ μὴ ἀφήσεις 'call him, do, and don't let him go.' The objection to the old explanation is that it confuses the distinction between οὐ and μή. In its other construction, with Aor. Subj. οὐ μή is a strong negation usually explained by an ellipse of δέος before μή.¹

The Repetition of Negatives (which must be of the same character throughout,—οὐ or μή) strengthens the negation if they belong to the same predicate, e.g. περὶ τοῦ μηδενὶ δεῖν μηδὲν δίδοναι, μηδ' ἂν ὅτιοῦν πράξῃ (Dem.) 'that we should give no reward to any one however deserving.' Otherwise, 'two negatives make an affirmative,' as οὐδεὶς ὅστις οὐ=πᾶς.

Caution I. With certain words always use μή.

(a) After εἰ, εἰάν, ἵνα, ὅπως, ὥς, ὅταν, etc.

Apparent exception: εἰάν σου καὶ Ἄνυτος οὐ φῆτε (Plato). οὐ φῆτε=negate, expressing one idea. (negative)

(b) After ὅστις and other relatives used indefinitely, e.g. αὐτὸ τὸ ἀποθανεῖν οὐδεὶς φοβεῖται ὅστις μὴ ἀλόγιστός ἐστι (Plato) i.e. nisi forte, nisi si. Apparent exception: οὐκ ἔσθ' ὅστις οὐκ ἂν εἰκότως ἐπιτιμήσειέ μοι. (Dem.) ὅστις is not indefinite 'whoever,' but 'who'—there is no one who, οὐκ ἂν ἐπιτ. = 'would not justly rebuke me.' So in οὐδεὶς ὅστις οὐ.

- (c) After verbs of fearing where μή = lest, and verbs of suspecting, surmising, taking heed, where μή = whether—not.

Notice the shades of meaning given by mood and tense in the following: ¹ δέδουκα μὴ ποιῆς 'I fear you are on the point of doing' (vereor ne facias).

μὴ ποιήσῃς 'I am afraid you will do it' (ne feceris).

μὴ ποιεῖς 'that you are doing it.'

- (?) μὴ ἐποίεις 'I fear you were doing it.'

μὴ ἐποίησας 'I fear you did it.'

μὴ πεποίηκας 'I fear you have done it.'

μὴ ποιήσεις (rare) 'I fear you are going to do it' (ne facturus sis).

- (d) After ὥστε with the Infinitive (but ὥστε with the Indicative takes οὐ).

Obs. With the Infinitive οὐ is joined after verbs of feeling, saying, and narrating, i.e. where the sentence can be broken up into the Indicative with ὅτι. Otherwise μή is usual with the Inf. Notice the difference between ἔξεστι μὴ ποιεῖν 'it is allowable to abstain from doing,' i.e. 'I need not do it,' and οὐκ ἔξεστι ποιεῖν 'I may not do it.'

In the following, ἀπάντων ἂν ἀπεστερήμην ἐγὼ καὶ μὴδὲ ταφῆναι προσυπῆρχεν οἴκοι μοι 'and besides I could not have been buried in my native land,' μὴδὲ ταφῆναι forms a substantival notion, though without the article.

Caution II. Do not omit negative particles, though they are absent from the English, in expressions of Denial, Doubt, Hindrance. In these οὐ goes with Ind., μή with Inf.

- (a) Denial. It cannot be denied that they wish for peace οὐδ' ἂν εἰς φήσειεν, ὥς οὐκ εἰρήνης ἐπιθυμοῦσι. He does not deny that he has the money οὐκ ἔξαρνός ἐστι (or οὐκ ἀπαρνέεται) μὴ οὐ τὰ χρήματα ἔχειν.
- (b) Doubt. I doubt the truth of this. ἀπιστῶ ταῦτα μὴ ἀληθῆ εἶναι. So ἀμφισβητεῖν ὥς οὐκ ἀληθῆ λέγομεν (to question the truth of our statement).
- (c) Hindrance. He prevents you from doing this. εἴργει σε μὴ τοῦτο ποιεῖν,—τοῦ μὴ τοῦτο ποιεῖν, or τὸ μὴ τοῦτο ποιεῖν quominus. 'They see no difficulty in the execution of their plans' οὐδὲν ἐμποδὼν φαίνεται μὴ οὐκ ἐπιτελέσαι ἔργον δ' ἂν γνῶσιν. So with verbs of refraining, refusing, forbidding.

Caution III. Do not confuse the uses of οὔτε (μήτε) and οὐδέ (μηδέ). οὔτε—οὔτε=neither—nor, have no reference to what has preceded. οὐδέ—οὐδέ=and not, also not, but not—nor yet, continue a sentence. οὔτε, οὔτε may be followed by οὐδέ, which then means not yet. οὔτε not, may be followed by a positive clause with τε (neque—et).

Οὐχ ὅπως—ἀλλά or ἀλλὰ καί—seems to be an ellipse for οὐχ ὅπως οὐ, as does non modo—ne quidem for non modo non. See, however, Sheppard's note on Thuc. i. 35. He would translate οὐχ ὅπως ἔφυγεν ἀλλ' οὐδὲ ἔτρεσε 'to say nothing of running away, he was not even frightened.' οὐχ ὅτι, i.e. οὐ λέγω ὅτι, is used similarly.

Caution IV. Never employ any of the following constructions unless a negative sentence precedes :—

- (1) πρὶν ἂν with Subj. see p. 41.
 - (2) ἐκὼν εἶναι (I will not do it) if I can help it.
 - (3) μὴ οὐ in the sense of quin, quominus, as above, with infinitives and participles, follows an expressed or an implied negative.
- N.B. Distinguish this carefully from δέδοικα μὴ οὐκ ἀποθάνη, vereor ut, —ne non, where μὴ clings on to the preceding verb, and the preceding sentence need not be a negative one.
- (4) μᾶλλον ἢ οὐ, where οὐ is redundant, is generally preceded by a negative.

XVIII. QUESTIONS.

The following are the formulæ most commonly used in Prose :—

I. Direct Questions. Single.	$\alpha\rho' \omicron\upsilon$	} Nonne.
	$\eta \omicron\upsilon\kappa$ $\eta \gamma\acute{\alpha}\rho$
	$\acute{\alpha}\lambda\lambda\omicron \tau\iota \eta$ $\acute{\alpha}\lambda\lambda\omicron \eta$
	$\acute{\alpha}\lambda\lambda\omicron \tau\iota$	} Answer, Yes.
	$\acute{\alpha}\rho\alpha \mu\acute{\eta}$	} Num.
	$\eta \kappa\omicron\upsilon$ $\mu\omega\nu$
		} Answer, No.

Double. $\pi\acute{o}\tau\epsilon\rho\omicron\nu \omicron\tau \pi\omicron\tau\epsilon\rho\alpha \eta$ $\acute{\alpha}\rho\alpha\text{---}\eta$; — $\mu\omega\nu\text{---}\eta$;

II. Indirect.

Single. $\epsilon\acute{\iota}$

Double. $\epsilon\acute{\iota}$ — η ; $\epsilon\acute{\iota}\tau\epsilon\text{---}\epsilon\acute{\iota}\tau\epsilon$;

See Clyde, 94, for a fuller account, and for instances of the rule that in both classes of questions 'the verb is negatived by $\omicron\upsilon$, and every other part of speech by $\mu\acute{\eta}$.'

Caution I. Do not fancy the Subjunctive is used as in Latin in questions following primary tenses. $\acute{\alpha}\gamma\theta\omega\acute{\iota} \tau\acute{\iota}\varsigma \acute{\epsilon}\sigma\tau\iota$ renders nescio quis sit. After Historic tenses either the Opt. or Ind. may be used.

Caution II. Do not couple two or more questions by and, as we do, but express them in one sentence ;
e.g.—

Who is guilty, and of what ? $\tau\acute{\iota}\varsigma \tau\acute{\iota}\nu\epsilon\varsigma \alpha\acute{\iota}\tau\iota\acute{o}\varsigma \acute{\epsilon}\sigma\tau\iota$;

Who are you, and whence have you come? τίς πόθεν ἦκεις;

Obs. Force and liveliness are often given (especially in a rhetorical passage) by throwing a categorical sentence into an interrogative form, e. g.— ὑβριζομένων καὶ τί κακὸν οὐχὶ πασχόντων 'enduring every kind of misery' (Dem. de Cor. 48).

πὼς ἂν αὐτὸν οἴσθε ἐτοίμως ἐφ' ὑμᾶς ἔλθειν (Dem. Ol. i. 16). 'Right gladly would he have advanced against you.' (See Appendix, No. XIV. 1. 6.)

XIX. TEN CAUTIONS ON THE USE OF ἄν.

1. Never begin a sentence with ἄν.

2. Never use the Present, or Perfect Indicative,—or the Future in any part of the Verb, with ἄν.

(a) What is or has been cannot be conditional, and ἄν, when joined with a Verb, involves a condition. It may appear to be joined to a Present, e. g., in οὐδ' ἂν ὑμεῖς οἴδ' ὅτι ἐπαύσασθε, for οὐδ' ὑμεῖς οἴδ' ὅτι ἐπαύσασθε ἄν. (See below on the Order of Words, No. XXVII. 9. b.)

(b) In a very few passages (if the MSS. are correct) it is found with the Future, but in some of these it really belongs to another word in the sentence. Wherever it occurs with a Future Infinitive, Madvig says there is an error in the reading.

3. Never use ἄν in the Protasis of a Conditional Sentence, nor consequently with a Participle to represent a Protasis.

4. Never omit ἄν in the Apodosis, to express what would be now, or would have been the result, if the condition were now fulfilled, or had been fulfilled.

Exceptions: (a) ἄν is omitted sometimes for emphasis. Cf. 'it had been good for that man,' for 'it would have been.'

(b) ἄν is omitted with ἔδει, προσήκειν, εἰκὸς ἦν, and other words denoting fitness.

5. Never omit ἄν in the Apodosis, to express what would be the result if the condition should be fulfilled.

6. Never use the Present Infinitive or Present Participle with ἄν, unless they can be resolved into the Imperfect Indicative with ἄν, or Present Optative with ἄν, e. g. φησὶν αὐτοὺς ἐλευθέρους ἂν εἶναι εἰ τοῦτο ἔπραξαν (where ἂν εἶναι = ἦσαν ἄν), or εἰ τοῦτο πράξειαν (where ἂν εἶναι = εἶησαν ἄν).

φησὶν αὐτοὺς ἐλευθέρους ἂν ὄντας εἰ τοῦτο ἔπραξαν (where ἂν ὄντας = ἦσαν ἄν), or εἰ τοῦτο πράξειαν (where ἂν ὄντας = εἶησαν ἄν). G. 41.

7. Never use the Aor. Inf. or Aor. Part. with ἄν, unless they can be resolved into either the Aor. Ind. with ἄν, e. g. οὐκ ἂν δοκῶ τοῦτο ξυμβῆναι γενέσθαι (οὐκ ἂν ξυμβῆναι = οὐκ ἂν ξυνέβη), or into the Aorist Optative with ἄν, e.g. οὕτε δυντα, οὕτ' ἄν γενόμενα λογοποιούσι (i.e. ἂ οὐκ ἄν γένοιτο).

ἄν with the Participle may often be conveniently employed for brevity, so as to obviate the necessity for expressing the full statement of the condition ; e.g. 'Among many other instances which might be adduced if desirable,' etc., πολλὰ ἄν ἔχων ἕτερ' εἰπεῖν (i.e. εἰ βουλόμην).

8. Never use ἄν with a Verb in Indirect Discourse unless it goes with it in the Direct Discourse (and never omit it when it is so used), e.g.—

φησὶ γράφειν ἄν εἰ ἐδύνατο He says ἔγραφον ἄν γράφαι ἄν εἰ ἐδυνήθη „ ἔγραψα ἄν γράφαι ἄν εἰ δυνηθείη „ γράφαιμι ἄν

9. Never retain ἄν with Relatives or Particles before Subj. in Indirect Discourse, when the Subj. is changed into the Opt., e.g. 'they are ready to fight if any one goes out' ἔτοιμοί εἰσι μάχεσθαι, ἐάν τις ἐξέρχεται becomes ἔλεξεν ὅτι ἔτοιμοι εἶσαν μάχεσθαι εἴ τις ἐξέρχοιτο.

10. Translate our iterative 'would' by ἄν with Imperfect or Aorist Indicative, e.g. ἐκλεγόμενος τὸν ἐπιτήδειον, ἔπαισεν ἄν (Xen.).

'Picking out the proper man, he would beat him' (as often as the circumstances occurred).

διηρώτων ἄν αὐτοὺς τί λέγοιεν (Plato).

'I would ask them (on each occasion) what they meant.'

The difference between the Aorist and Imperfect in the above, turns upon the distinction inherent in the two tenses between a single and a continuous action. The blow was not repeated ; the questions were.

ὥσπερ ἀνεί 'just as if' (ὥσπερ ἂν εἶ) involves an ellipse, e.g., ἐμὲ παράδειγμα ποιούμενος ὥσπερ ἂν εἶ εἶποι (Plato, Ap. 23). 'Using my name as an illustration, as if he said' (i. e. ὥσπερ ἂν ποιοῖτο εἶ).

XX. SOME IDIOMS OF TWELVE OF THE COMMONEST VERBS.

Variety is gained by using these : —

1. εἰμί. (a) With the relative and relative particles ἔστιν οἷ, ἔστιν ἀφ' ὧν, etc. = some, ἔστιν ὅπου = somewhere, ἔστιν ὅπως in some manner, ἔστιν ὅτε sometimes ; (b) = it is possible ἔστιν ἰδεῖν ; (c) ἐστὶ μοι βουλομένῃ, — of inclination or aversion ; (d) to be at the mercy of τινὲς ἦσαν Φιλίππου (e) of a class ἐγὼ δὲ τίνων εἰμί ; (f) fitness ἄρχοντός ἐστι (g) to be engaged in εἶναι ἐν φιλοσοφίᾳ, also εἶναι περὶ τὰ ἐπιτήδεια, also still stronger ἦν ὅλος πρὸς τῷ λήμματι (Dem.), totus in quæstu, 'wholly bent upon gain.' (h) the impf. for the pres. with ἄρα, τὸ δὲ ἄρα οὐ τοῦτο ἦν, τὸ ἐπαινεῖν, 'so then as it appears to praise a thing is something quite different.' (i) of real existence αὐτὸ δ' ἔστι, — τὸ ὄν. (k) it is redundant in τὸ νῦν εἶναι, τὸ ἐπ' ἐκείνοισι εἶναι, ἐκὼν εἶναι (the last only in negative clauses).

2. ἔχω. (a) = with, ἔχων στρατόν. (b) to be able, with a negative it = know, and is followed by a dependent clause, οὐκ ἔχω ὅτι χρήσωμαι τῷ ἀργυρίῳ. (c) With adverbs of manner καλῶς ἔχει bene habet, δυσλύτως ἔχει, — εὐαισθητῶς ἔχειν ‘to be of quick perceptions,’ χαριέντως καὶ μεμελημένως ἔχει ‘it is a charming piece of workmanship and very finished.’ Also with genitive added, πῶς ἔχεις δόξης; what is your opinion? ἀμελῶς ἔχειν τινός, — ὥς εἶχε τάχους. (d) οἱ ἔχοντες, the rich.

3. ἄγω. (a) To celebrate, ἑορτὴν ἄγειν. (b) ἡσυχίαν, ἀσχολίαν ἄγειν, to be at rest, or the contrary. (c) Like duco to hold or account, ἐντίμως or ἐν τιμῇ ἄγειν.

4. λέγω. (a) To esteem as naught, οὐδαμοῦ λέγειν. (b) To speak to the point. (See XXV. Reason.) (c) τὸ λεγόμενον, as the saying goes.

5. ἔρχομαι. (a) With participle, of intention. This is more common in Ionic, but Plato uses it, Phæd. 100, where ἔρχομαι ἐπιχειρῶν ἐπιδείξασθαι = ἔρχομαι ἐπιδειξόμενος. (b) διὰ φιλίας ἔρχεσθαι and ἵεναι τινί to be friendly to a person (and the opposite).

6. ποιῶ. (a) ‘To compose’ τραγῳδίαν, λόγον, but ποιῆσθαι ‘to deliver a speech,’ — to represent in poetry ποιεῖν Ἀχιλλεῖα ἀμείνω Ὀδυσσέως. (b) To celebrate θυσίαν, ἑορτὴν, τὰ Ἱσθμια. (c) To cause, bring about for others, εἰρήνην, πόλεμον (but ποιεῖσθαι on one’s own part),—ποιεῖν τινα ἀπορεῖν. (d) To do good or evil to, ἀγαθόν, κακόν τινα ποιεῖν (also εὖ or κακῶς), but καλῶς ποιῶν may=‘with good reason.’ (e) To hold, in the Middle, δεινὸν ποιείσθαι τι aggrè ferre, περὶ πολλοῦ, παρ’ ὀλίγον ποιείσθαι, magni, parvi facere.

7. πράττω. (a) To effect an object, with ὅπως and the future, ἐπραττον ὅπως τις βοήθεια ἥξει (Thuc.). Also with acc. and inf., ἐπρασσε τὴν ναῦν μὴ δεῦρο πλεῖν (Dem.). (b) To manage, negotiate, esp. of State matters, τὰ πολιτικά,—ικανὸς πράττειν ‘an able statesman;’ hence οἱ πράσσοντες, ‘the traitors’ (Thuc.). (c) To fare, εὖ, κακῶς. (d) To exact, both in the Active and Middle. (The later Attic form is πράττω.)

8. τίθημι. (a) τίθισθαι παρ’ οὐδέν to reckon as naught (like ποιείσθαι above). (b) πόλεμον εὖ θέσθαι, to settle. (c) θέσθαι τὰ ὅπλα to pile arms, take up a position. (d) To assume, a favourite word with Plato. The active generally takes εἶναι, οἱ τὸ κενὸν εἶναι τιθέντες, but οἱ τὸ κενὸν τιθέμενοι (so too ποιεῖν and ποιείσθαι).

9, 10, 11. τυγχάνω, λανθάνω, φθάνω. Employ the common construction of these three verbs, by which the leading idea of the sentence is expressed in the participle (see above, No. XV. 4. ii.): e.g. ἔτυχον ἐν τῇ ἀγορᾷ ὄπλῃται καθεύδοντες ‘soldiers happened to be sleeping in the market-place.’ οὐκ ἔφθασαν πυθόμενοι καὶ ἤκου ‘they no sooner heard than they came.’ ἔλαθεν ἀφθέντα πάντα ‘everything took fire before she was aware.’ λήσετε διαφθαρέντες ‘you will find when too late that you are spoilt.’

Obs. (a) οὐκ ἂν φθάνοις λέγων is used as an exhortation or challenge, quin statim loqueris, ‘the sooner you say it the better.’ [Madvig denies that it is a question.]

(b) This construction with φθάνω (seldom with λαμβάνω in prose) is sometimes reversed. φθάνοντες ἤδη δηοῦμεν τὴν γῆν (Xen.).

(c) ἔλαθε τοῦτο ποιήσας may mean ‘he did this without any one knowing it’ (sc. πάντας ἔλαθε), or ‘he did it unconsciously’ (sc. ἑαυτόν). G. 112.

(d) Other idioms of τυγχάνω are οἱ τυχόντες, ordinary persons. ὃ τι ἂν τύχωσι τοῦτο λέγουσι, ‘they say whatever comes to hand.’ ὃ τι ἂν τύχωσι τοῦτο πράξουσιν ‘they will fare as chance wills it.’ εἰ ἔτυχεν, and τυχόν used absolutely = perhaps.

12. χρῶμαι. (a) οὐκ ἂν ἔχοις ὃ τι χρῶο σαυτῷ ‘you would not know what to do with yourself.’ (b) Often by euphemism, of adverse circumstances, to experience or labour under: χρῆσθαι χειμῶνι, δυστυχία, μεταβολή, δυσχωρία, etc.

XXI. CAUTIONS ON THE PREPOSITIONS.

1. Avoid those uses of Prepositions which are only poetic ; e.g. ἀμφί, ἀνά and μετά with the Dative.

2. Observe that there are several ways of expressing the same relation by different Greek Prepositions, e.g. rest at, where previous motion is implied, καταλῦσαι παρά τινα, παρά τινι, or πρὸς τινα 'to stop with a person.' So παρῆναι εἰς τόπον.—'To count for nothing,' δι' οὐδενὸς ποιῆσθαι, ἐν οὐδενὶ λόγῳ ποιῆσθαι, περὶ οὐδενὸς ποιῆσθαι, or παρ' οὐδενὶ τίθесθαι.

3. Prepositions will often be required where they are disguised in the English ; e.g. 'after having been tyrant he became a schoolmaster,' ἐκ τυράννου.

4. Learn the force of Prepositions in composition. See for this under each Preposition, the list of verbs in Liddell and Scott's Lexicon, and Clyde, 85.

XXII. CAUTIONS ON HOMERIC AND HELLENISTIC GREEK

Remember that the period of the best Greek Prose, the Attic Age, was barely a century, extending from the time of Antiphon (420 B.C.) to the death of Demosthenes (322 B.C.). Therefore, while detached expressions and forms of speech may occasionally be used on the authority of later writers (e.g. Aristotle), the best models are the authors who wrote within these limits. Avoid the two extremes ;

I. (a) Homeric Words, e.g.

Avoid κῦδος. Use κλέος, εὐκλεία, εὐδοξία.

„ αἶνος „ ἔπαινος.

„ ἄναξ „ βασιλεύς.

(b) Homeric Constructions, e.g. Avoid the Epic use of the relatives ὅς and ὅστις in Final Clauses with the Subjunctive group. The rule in Attic is to use the Future Indicative to denote a purpose ; e.g. πέμπει ἄγγελον ὅστις ἔρεῖ.—ἄνδρας ἐλῆσθαι οἱ νόμους ξυγγράψουσι. (See above, No. X. 1.) The Final Conjunction ὅφρα is only poetic.

The combination καί—τε is peculiar to Epic. τε καί is the Attic usage.

II. Hellenistic words to be avoided. The Classical equivalents are αἰώνιος eternal (it is used—but only in a few places—in Plato). αἰδώς, ἀθάνατος.

ἡ οἰκουμένη.

In classical Greek this = the portion of the world inhabited by the Greeks opp. to barbarian lands.

ἐγγίζω to approach.

πλησιάζω, with dative (πελάζω is rare in prose).

Hellenistic words to be avoided.	The Classical equivalents.
ἐνώπιον before (coram).	ἐναντίον .
εὐχαριστῶ to give thanks.	χάριν οἶδα or ἔχω .
ἐπισκοπή an inspection.	ἐξέτασις , but ἐπισκοπος and ἐπισκοπῶ are classical.
θέλημα will.	προαίρεσις (will), ὄρεξις , ἐπιθυμία , desire.
καθώς as.	καθά and καθάπερ ,— καθό =in so far as.
μάχαιρα a sword.	ξίφος .— μάχαιρα is never the soldier's straight sword. It is sometimes used for an assassin's weapon, and sometimes for a sabre or bent sword. In general it is a dirk or knife .
οἶδαμεν, οἴδατε , etc.	ἴσμεν, ἴστε , etc.
οἱ οὐρανοί .	οὐρανός .
ὑπόκρισις hypocrisy.	εἰρων , εἰρωνεύομαι , but ὑποκρίνεσθαι is used twice by Demosthenes.

Hellenistic constructions to be avoided.

αὐξάνειν used intransi-tively.

ἐγένετο ὅτι.

ὥστε, with infinitive, of a purpose.

ἵνα, with verbs of com- manding and entreating.

ἀποκρύπτω ἀπό.

ἐντρέπομαι τινα to pay regard to.

θαυμάζω περί.

The Classical equivalents.

Use συμβαίνειν.

(a) συνέβη αὐτῷ ἀνελεσθαι.

(b) συνέβη Γελῶνα νικᾶν.

(c) συμβαίνει εἶναι = ἐστί.

Use the simple infinitive, e.g. τὴν πόλιν φυλάττειν αὐτοῖς παρέδωκαν.
The classical use of ὥστε with infinitive is to express a result.

See above (No. IX. sub fin.) for the classical construction.

θαυμάζω τινά τινος (to admire).

θαυμάζω σου λέγοντος (to wonder at).

θαυμάζω εἰ (to wonder whether).

XXIII. ATTIC POLITENESS.

The forms which this assumes are very various. Notice the following :—

1. The avoidance of a blunt imperative, e.g. εἰ δὲ μὴ, Χειρίσοφος ἡγοῖτο.

2. The avoidance of a direct future. ποῖ οὖν τραποίμεθ' ἂν 'should we turn?' (i.e. shall we turn?)

3. The avoidance of a point-blank negation; the construction of οὐ μὴ with the conj. is an instance of this, on the theory of its being an ellipse for οὐ δέος μὴ. (See, however, Goodwin, 89.)

4. The numerous formulæ for expressing a wish. πῶς ἂν σοι διηγησάμην; ἐστὶ μοι βουλομένῳ, εἰ γὰρ ὄφελον, βουλοίμην ἂν velim (instead of βούλομαι). ἐβουλόμην ἂν vellem.

5. Euphemisms, such as οὐ ῥάδιον, οὐκ ὀλγοί, οὐ χεῖρον, for χαλεπόν, πολλοί, ἄμεινον, etc. (See Farrar, 311.) The idiom of the double comparative ταχύτερα ἢ σοφώτερα may be referred to this, it being gently implied that there is very little of the second quality (Sheppard on Thuc. i. 21.)

6. The polite use of δέδοικα μὴ ποιεῖς,—ἐποίησας,—πεποίηκας, where no doubt is really intended.

7. The constant employment of εἰ for ὅτι. This is one of the strongest instances of the avoidance in Attic of direct assertion. It is most used with θαυμάζω, αἰσχύνομαι, ἀγαπάω, ἀγανακτέω. (See Clyde, 43, obs. 2.) δεινὸν ποιεῖσθαι, δεινὸν ἐστί.

I do not wonder that Philip prevails over you.

οὐ θαυμάζω εἰ [not ὅτι] Φίλιππος περιγίγνεται ὑμῶν.

He is not satisfied with having escaped punishment.

οὐκ ἀγαπᾷ εἰ μὴ δίκην δέδωκε.

8. The particle που used in a half-questioning way, where real certainty is felt. οὐ τί που οἶε 'you do not, I suppose, imagine?' So δήπου 'I suppose you will grant.'

9. The polite way of expressing a superlative. ὁ Σωκράτης εἶπερ τις καὶ ἄλλος = 'more than any other man.'

10. The various responsive formulæ (besides the direct ναί and οὐ), e.g. πάνυ γε, καὶ μάλα, μάλιστά γε, πῶς γὰρ οὐ; πῶς (τί) οὐ μέλλω; τί μὴν;—οὐ πολλὰ ἂν ἀλογία εἴη; πολλὰ μέντοι.

So σχεδόν is used to soften a positive assertion, σχεδόν τι ταῦτα. So ἥκιστά γε, πόθεν;=οὐδαμῶς. Any page of a Platonic dialogue will supply others.

The forms for a civil refusal—κάλλιστ' ἐπαινῶ 'thank you, no,' and γενηαῖος εἰ, 'you are very good,' though only found in Aristophanes, would be admissible in colloquial prose.

XXIV. THE PARTICLES.

The appreciation of the full force of the Greek Particles, with their many delicate shades of meaning, while it forms one great difficulty in translation into English,¹ is also one of the main tests of good rendering into Greek. We have but few equivalents for them. Where we emphasise in speaking by gesture or stress of the voice, and in writing by some mark of interjection, or by the aid of italics, the Greeks would employ some slight but most significant particle. (See the preceding section, 8-10.)

Caution. See whether there is not some general train of thought underlying the sentence, which requires the introduction of one or more particles. Do not expect to find them represented by the exact words of the English.

Particles are used as (A) Conjunctions to connect sentences. (B) Adverbs to qualify some term.

A. as Conjunctions. (a) Copulative. To link sentences together, τε and καί. The most usual collocation is τε — καί, both—and: ἄλλως τε καί, both in other respects, and also = especially. καί—καί mark off more distinctly each member, e.g. καὶ ζῶν καὶ τελευτήσας (Thuc.).

¹ See some good remarks in Jowett's Preface to the Translation of Plato (2nd ed.); also Cope's edition of the Gorgias, pp. ix. x.

καί—δέ. This gives greater prominence to the second member, καὶ πάντες δ' οἱ βάρβαροι 'yes, and the natives too.'

καί = 'when' 'and immediately' in a second clause, καὶ ἤδη ἦν μεσημβρία, καὶ ἄνθρωποι ἡσθάνοντο (Plato), and after temporal conjunctions it = actually: ὡς δὲ ἔδοξεν, καὶ ἐχώρουν (Thuc.).

καί = as, e.g. with ὅμοιος and παραπλήσιος. Cf. perinde ac, idem ac.

εἰ καί = etsi, quamquam if even, although.

καὶ εἰ = etiamsi even if.

In the last two instances, the καί in the former case refers to the whole concessive sentence, in the latter only to the εἰ.

(On the omission of καί see above, No. XVIII. Caution ii.)

It sometimes = or, ὀλίγου τιwὸς ἀξία καὶ οὐδενός 'little or nothing'; χθὲς καὶ πρόην 'yesterday or the day before.'

Caution. Never use καί—τε to link sentences.

In καὶ πρὸς αὐτῷ τ' ἐγένοντο καὶ εἶδον τὴν ὄψιν (Plato, Phaed. 254), τε goes not with the first καί, but with the second which = when, as above.

(b) Adversative. Greek sentences are set one against another far more than is the case with us. Also where there is no opposition traceable in English, sentences must be thus linked together in a Greek version.

The following passage from Lord Macaulay's Essay on Johnson will illustrate this : — ' He (the Athenian) saw the plays of Sophocles and Aristophanes ; he walked amidst the friezes of Phidias and the paintings of Zeuxis ; he knew by heart the dramas of Æschylus ; he heard the rhapsodist at the corner of the street reciting the shield of Achilles or the death of Argus ; he was a legislator, he was a soldier, he was a judge.' Here are seven distinct sentences without any link.

In Greek each sentence would be introduced by some particle. τὰς μὲν γὰρ τοῦ Σοφοκλέους τραγωδίας τὰς δὲ τοῦ Ἀριστοφάνους κωμωδίας ἐθεᾶτο ἄν, τοὺς δὲ περιπάτους ἄν ἐποιεῖτο παρὰ τὰ τρίγλυφα τὰ ὑπὸ τοῦ Φειδίου κεκαλλωπισμένα ἢ τὰς τοῦ Ζεύξιδος γραφάς· εἰπεῖν δ' ἄν ἀπὸ στόματος δύναίτο τὰ τοῦ Αἰσχύλου χορικά, τῶν δ' ἀοιδῶν ἠκροᾶτο ἐν ταῖς τριόδοις ῥαψωδούντων, κ. τ. λ.

Caution. Never use μὲν without δέ or some substitute following.

The substitutes are ἀλλά, αὖ (and its compounds) μήν, γε μήν, μέντοι, ὅμως. Sometimes πρῶτον μὲν is followed by ἔπειτα or εἰτα without δέ.

If μὲν appears ever to be used without δέ, e.g. ἐγὼ μὲν οὐκ οἶδα,—ἐμοὶ μὲν οὐ πιθανός, the adversative clause can be easily supplied mentally.

B. Adverbial Particles.

καί. It is often added in Greek where we do not express it (see III. 4, c). The following senses are given by its adverbial force—really, indeed, even already, as it is, even so. It has an increasing sense, and gives precision, ὅτου καὶ σμικρὸν ὄφελος ‘any good at all.’ It expresses our emphasis laid on the Verb. How did he perish? πῶς καὶ διώλετο; (but καὶ πῶς did he perish?). What are we to think? τί χρή καὶ προσδοκᾶν; In combination with other particles καὶ τοι ‘and yet,’ καίτοι γε, καί—γε, always with a word inserted; καὶ πολλοί γε aye and even many, atque adeo; καὶ μάλα quite so; καὶ ταῦτα and this too; καὶ δὴ supposing that; καὶ δὴ and καὶ δὴ καί, in a series; ὑγίεια καὶ ἰσχύς καὶ καλλος καὶ πλοῦτος δὴ. —ζῶων πάντων βίους καὶ δὴ καὶ (and what's more) τοὺς ἀνθρωπίνους. Sometimes it is ironical, καὶ δὴ καὶ οἱ νέοι ταῦτα παρ' ἐμοῦ μανθάνουσι ‘then I suppose,’ or ‘then you mean to say that.’

These various uses of this familiar word (and they are far from being exhaustive) will show how much is contained in a Greek particle. For the remaining ones,¹ which might be illustrated almost indefinitely, the following indications may here suffice:—

ἀλλά. Standing alone, it often = nay or well. Its combinations with other particles, especially in Plato, are very numerous, e.g. ἀλλὰ γάρ 'but really,' or 'but be that as it may.' οὐ μὲν ἀλλὰ 'not but what.' οὐ μέντοι ἀλλὰ 'yet so far from the contrary.' οὐ μέντοι ἀλλὰ θαυμάζουμι ἂν 'yet I don't mean by this that I should not wonder'—similarly οὐ γὰρ ἀλλὰ. ἀλλ' ἢ =except.

γε=yes, ay, at least, at all events, quite in exclamations, σχέτιλιὰ γε λέγεις 'quite abominable.' Alone or in combination it answers generally to quidem and its compounds.

μήν (besides its adversative force=μέντοι vero) strengthens asseverations, e.g. ἢ μήν in oaths, in which, or in any strong protestation, it must be inserted. τί μήν=what else? i.e. why not? quidni? οὐ μήν='you surely don't mean to say.' καὶ μήν='yet really,' or 'but yet.'

ἢ γάρ; 'is it not so? eh?' ἢ που 'what? is it possible?' in real or affected doubt.

τοι introduces maxims—μή τοι γε δὴ, μή τί γε δὴ=nedum, much less. δῆτα strengthens affirmative and negative answers=just so, to be sure, or surely not.

The following are ironical—δὴ, φίλους δὴ ὄντας as they said; δῆθεν as they pretended; ὡς δὴ as if, so very likely! δήπου I should hope, I presume; and still stronger δήπουθεν I suppose you will grant that; που alone=I take it.

The inferential particles are—ἄρα, often it='so then after all' (see XX. 1, h). οὖν, δὴ, τοίνυν, τοίγαρ, τουγαρούν, τοίγάρτοι.

Notice the following combinations—γούν='any way, at any rate, for example.' δ' οὖν='at all events.' ἐκ δ' οὖν τῆς γῆς ἀνεχώρησαν (Thuc. ii. 5), 'However this might be about their taking an oath, the Thebans did retire without committing any wrong.' Sometimes it='to resume' after a digression. μὲν οὖν='nay rather,' immo vero.

Caution. Of the particles in this section, the following cannot begin a sentence, τε, μέν, δέ, γάρ, γε, μήν, μέντοι, ἄρα, οὖν, που, δὴ (and its compounds), τοι, τοίνυν.¹

XXV. GREEK EQUIVALENTS FOR MODERN TERMS.

The difficulty of finding adequate Greek words in translating from an English author is no doubt a real difficulty; but it is less formidable than it is apt to be imagined. It diminishes with wider reading, greater observation of the genius of the language, greater familiarity with the best models, and above all by constant translation, which shows how much ancient and modern thought have in common. Greek is so plastic and flexible, its capability (through the endless combinations of its Article with adjectives, adverbs, and nouns) of framing nouns which can enter into any part of the sentence, is so unlimited ;—its wealth of verbal forms and prepositions,—its power of compounding words are each so great,—its particles are so numerous, and represent so many refinements of thought, that it would seem there were but few ideas which it would fail to express. Care, however, must be taken to steer clear on the one hand of the Scylla of too great freedom, which loses the real meaning of an author, and on the other of the Charybdis of a servile rendering of word for word or clause for clause. To the latter danger beginners are most exposed. Beware of sacrificing the sense to the form. First read the whole through carefully, and think what style, what author, and, where possible, what portion of an author it most resembles. Then con over each sentence, and reclothe it mentally in a Greek dress. Avoid as far as is practicable English-Greek Lexicons, which mislead almost as much as they aid, since they seldom give the exact sense of the word in the particular context in which it meets you. Rather verify words supplied by the memory, by the use of Liddell and Scott's Lexicon, or such books as Ast's 'Lexicon Platonicum.'

The following list of words which often present a difficulty may be useful. They are of a miscellaneous character, but principally abstract terms. It is not to be supposed that wherever they occur they must be so translated. The turn given to a sentence, or the nature of the context, may suggest other and better renderings.

Abstract. To consider a thing in the abstract, ἀπλῶς, or use αὐτός, αὐτὸ τὸ καλόν (Plato). Aristotle uses the forms αὐτοάγαθον, αὐτοάνθρωπος, αὐτόζωον. See below, Ideal and Qualified.

Ammunition. The terms of ancient warfare must, as a rule, be substituted for those of the modern art of war, e.g. βέλη, βάλλω, ἀκόντια, ἀκοντίζω, τοξεύω, and their compounds. ἔξω βελῶν, 'out of gunshot'; ἀμφίβολος, 'between two fires'; λιθοβόλος of an engine. The sling σφενδόνη will supply some expressions, as μολυβδῖς, 'a leaden bullet' (see Xen. Anab. iii. 3).

If the mention of powder cannot be avoided, use θεῖον, sulphur.

Authority. (1) Official authority, κῦρος,—αἱ βουλαι τῶν Βοιωτῶν, αἵπερ ἅπαν τὸ κῦρος ἔχουσι (Thuc. v. 38). So κύριος, τὸ κύριον and τὰ κύρια. τέλος and its various idioms, τὰ τέλη, the magistrates οἱ ἐν τέλει, οἱ μάλιστα ἐν τέλει, οἱ τὰ τέλη ἔχοντες, τέλος ἔχειν = to have full powers, be plenipotentiary. Also οἱ ἐν τοῖς πράγμασι, οἱ ἄρχοντες. (2) In the sense of influence, weight of character, see below, Character. (3) An authority (for a statement), perhaps τὸ πιστόν or some of its derivatives, e.g. πιστὸν ἔχειν, to rest on authority; συγγραφεὺς ἀξιόπιστος, a trustworthy historian; πιστεῦσαι τεκμηρίω.—

What rests on no authority, what cannot be proved or disproved,—for which there are no data for a conclusion, ἀνεξέλεγκτος.

Balance. For such expressions as the balance of power, use ῥέπειν, ῥοπή, or the compounds ἰσόρροπος, ἀντίρροπος, also ἀντίπαλος and ἰσοπαλής. (See L. & S. on both these groups of words.)

Aristotle says of Carthage that 'though it included the popular element, it preserved the balance of the constitution,' τὸ τὸν δῆμον ἔχουσαν διαμένειν ἐν τῇ τάξει τῆς πολιτείας (Pol. ii. 11).

Basis, starting-point, ἀφορμή. To make a place the basis of one's operations, ὁρμᾶσθαι ἐκ τόπου.

Belief. To entertain a religious belief, in a deity, νομίζειν, or ἡγεῖσθαι. Cf. οὗς ἡ πόλις νομίζει θεοὺς οὐ νομίζων (Xen.). ἄθεος is classical.

Capital. ἀφορμή, or use ὑπάρχω, τὰ ὑπάρχοντα.

Character. ἦθος, τρόπος, τρόποι, ὀργή, dignity of character, ἀξίωμα, as felt by others; ἀξίωσις = rather, a man's sense of dignity. [χαρακτήρ, common in poetry in the sense of a distinctive stamp or mark, is very rare in prose, used only twice in Plato, and then = form or characteristic of a thing.]

Civilisation, Civilised. Perhaps ἡ κατὰ πόλεις διαίτα. Plato has οἱ ἐν νόμοις καὶ ἀνθρώποις τεθραμμένοι

Comfort. (1) = consolation, παραμυθεῖσθαι and its cognate forms παραμυθία, παραμύθιον (παραψυχή, poetic, is extremely rare in prose). (2) Of the comforts of life, εὐπαθεῖν, εὐπαθῶς πάσχειν, εὐπάθεια, τὰ ἀγαθά. (3) Relief, saving of trouble, ῥαστώνη, a favourite word with Plato. οὐκ οὐν πολλὴ ῥαστώνη γίγνεται; isn't it a great comfort?

Commerce. ἐμπορία (ἐμπορικός, commercial).

Committee. πρόβουλοι, σύνεδροι.

Communism. τὸ κοινὰς ἔχειν τὰς κτήσεις, or τὸ ὁμαλίζειν τὰς οὐσίας.

Community (the). τὸ κοινόν, τὸ πολιτικόν, ἡ πόλις.

Commons (the). ὁ δῆμος, τὸ πλῆθος, οἱ πολλοί.

Common sense. νοῦς. Sensible = νουνεχής, adv. νουνεχόντως, μέτρια πράσσειν.

Compromise. (1) σύμβασις, συμβαίνειν or σύμβασιν ποιεῖσθαι, ὁμολογίαν ποιεῖσθαι ἐπὶ τούτοις, ὁμολογεῖν. Also διαλύεσθαι and διαλλάσσεσθαι. (2) = to endanger, εἰς κίνδυνον προάγειν.

Conception. ὑπολαμβάνειν, νοεῖν, ὑπόληψις, νόησις of the faculty, νόημα of the concept or thought.

Conscience. Use συνειδέναι (see L. & S.). συνειδήσις may also perhaps be used on the authority of Bias and Periander, quoted by Stobæus (ὀρθή and ἀγαθὴ συνείδησις).

Constitution (the). ἡ πολιτεία or ἡ κατάστασις τῆς πολιτείας or τῶν πραγμάτων. To act in a constitutional manner, πολιτικῶς ἔχειν, or κατὰ τοὺς νόμους πολιτεύεσθαι.

Consul. (1) The Roman Consul. The terms used by Polybius are ὁ ὑπατος στρατηγός, ὁ ἥπατος, and ὁ στρατηγός. (2) πρόξενος nearly = the modern Resident.

Contracts. συμβόλαια.

Counterfeit. See Genuine.

Decisive, of a battle. Use εἰς πείραν μάχης ἵναί, διακινδυνεύειν, or ἐπὶ ῥοπῆς μιᾶς εἶναι. Indecisive, ἀγχώματος, ἰσόρροπος.

Despair. ἀπόνοια, τὸ ἀνέλπιστον. To reduce to despair, εἰς ἀπόνοιαν καταστήσαι. Cf. too Thuc. iii. 46, ἀνέλπιστον καταστήσαι τοῖς ἀποστᾶσιν ὥς οὐκ ἔσται μεταγνῶναι, 'to make the seceders feel that it is hopeless to repent.' ἄνθρωποι ἀπονειοσμένοι, desperate men. Also ἄπορος, ἀπορεῖν, ἀπορία. ἐν ἀπόροις εἶναι (to be in a desperate strait).

Diplomatists. πρεσβευτής, plural πρέσβεις.

Disadvantage. To be at a disadvantage with a person, ἐλασσοῦσθαι τινος, or οὐκ ἐκ τοῦ ἴσου μάχεσθαι (at an advantage, ἀπὸ or ἐκ περιουσίας).

Discipline. πειθαρχεῖν, πειθαρχία, εὐταξία, εὐτακτεῖν, εὐτάκτως ἔχειν, (opp. to ἀταξία, ἀτακτεῖν, ἀσύντακτος,) εὖκοσμος, ἑμμελής, μάλιστα συντεταγμένοι τοῦ παντὸς στρατοῦ (Thuc.), 'the best disciplined troops. 'Also συγκεκριημένοι τὰ τοῦ πολέμου (Dem.).

Disfranchised. ἄτιμος opp. to ἐπίτιμος.

Disposition. See Character. Of good natural disposition, εὐφυής, εὐφυῖα, εὕκολος, εὕκολία.

Eccentric. ἀλλόκοτος (Plato), ἰδιογνώμων (Aristotle).

Emigration. αἱ μεταναστάσεις, τὸ μετανίστασθαι. Emigrants, οἱ μετανιστάμενοι (ἄποικος, etc., if there is the notion of a colony).

Ennui, to suffer, βαρέως ἔχειν τι, also ἄση (ἄσαι καὶ λύπαι, Plato).

Equity. ἐπιείκεια. Aristotle defines the character of the equitable man as ἐπανόρθωμα νόμου ἢ ἁλλείπει διὰ τὸ καθόλου, 'a correction of law where it is defective by reason of its universality,' and adds that he will not press the letter of the law on the worse side, but is content to waive his strict claims, ὁ μὴ ἀκριβοδίκαιος ἐπὶ τὸ χεῖρον ἀλλ' ἐλαττωτικός.

Essential. (1) See Ideal. (2) =important πολλοῦ ἄξιον, προὔργου (see L. and S.).

Euphemism, Euphemistic. εὐφημος and εὐφημία are used, but not εὐφημεῖν, which = 'to avoid all unlucky words,' δι' εὐφημίαν by way of euphemism, e.g. of substituting the name ἀποικία for ἀπαλλαγή (Plato, Legg. 736). For a single verb in the sense of palliating = calling a thing by courtesy by a fair name (or the converse), use ὑποκορίζεσθαι (see L. & S. on this interesting word).

Exaggerate (to). ἐπὶ τὸ μεῖζον κοσμεῖν, αὐξάνειν, — πλεονάζεσθαι (in the passive).

Excess. ὑπερβολή (opp. to ἑλλειψις or ἔνδεια).

Exchequer. τὸ δημόσιον, τὸ κοινόν. Chancellor of the Exchequer, ὁ ἐπὶ τῆς διοικήσεως.

Experience. ἡ ἐμπειρία, also τὰ πράγματα.

Exports. τὰ ἐξαγώγιμα. Imports, τὰ εἰσαγώγιμα.

Extemporaneous. To extemporise, αὐτοσχεδιάζειν (avoid αὐτοσχεδῖος in prose), also ἐξ ὑπογυίου τι ποιεῖν.

Faculty. δύναμις, e.g. ἡ τῆς ὀφθews, αἱ τοῦ σώματος.

Fashion. Of dress, σχῆμα, in this fashion, τοῦτον τὸν τρόπον, — fashionable, τὸ ἐπιπόλαζον, what is apparent, or has come to the surface (of opinions), αἱ μάλιστα ἐπιπολάζουσαι δόξαι (Ar. Eth. i. 4). Use also νομίζομαι, τὰ νενομισμένα, and, where the notion of newfangled is contained, καινός and its compounds, e.g. καινοτομεῖν.

Feeling. Use πάσχω, πάθος. ταῦτὸν τοῦτο πάσχω πρὸς τοὺς φιλοσοφούντας, this is my feeling too with regard to the philosophers.

Function. ἔργον.

Genial. εὐθυμος, εὐκολος, φαιδρός, ἱλαρός.

Genius. (1) φύσεως ἰσχὺς or δύναμις. Cf. Thuc. i. 138, ἣν γὰρ ὁ Θεμιστοκλῆς βεβαιότατα δὴ φύσεως ἰσχὺν δηλώσας, 'exhibited in the most indisputable manner force of natural genius.' Also εὐφυΐα, σύνεσις, συνετός. (2) A genius. Use θεῖος or δαιμόνιος τὴν διάνοιαν, or perhaps ὑψηλονοῦς. Cf. Plato, Μενο, 94, on Pericles, οὕτω μεγαλοπρεπῶς σοφὸν ἄνδρα. (3) 'Consider now his evil genius,' σκέψασθε δὴ τὸν δαίμονα (Æschines).

Gentleman, Gentlemanly. καλοκάγαθος, ἐλευθέριος, opp. to ἀνελεύθερος, δουλοπρεπής, ἀνδραποδώδης.

Genuine. εἰλικρινής, γνήσιος, ἀληθινός. Spurious, counterfeit, παρίσημος, κίβδηλος.—γόνιμόν τε καὶ ἀληθές, of the creations of the mind (Plato, Theæt. 150).

Glory. τὸ εὐδοκιμεῖν, κλέος, εὐκλεία, δόξα. Glorious, renowned, εὐδόκιμος, εὐδοξος, ἔνδοξος, ὀνομαστός, λαμπρός, ἐλλόγιμος, ἐπιφανής. In Prose, κλεινός is rare.

Guarantee. ἐγγύη and its derivatives, ἐγγυάω, ἐγγυητής, τὸ πιστόν.

Habit. (1)=custom, manner, τρόπος, ἐπιτηδεύματα, τὰ καθ' ἡμέραν ἐπιτηδεύματα,—ἔθος (Thuc.), to be habitual, ἐν ἔθει εἶναι or γίγνεσθαι. (2) The regular word employed in Aristotle (and occasionally in Plato, ἔξις καὶ διάθεσις, Phil. ii.) for the moral and intellectual habits is αἱ ἔξεις.

Health. ὑγίεια, εὐεξία, and ἔξις for a good habit of body.

Honest, Honesty. δίκαιος, χορηστός, ἀπλοῦς, ἀπλότης, χρηστότης. Honesty is the best policy, λυσitteλ-σπερον ἀδικίας δικαιοσύνη,—ἀνδραγαθία, ἀνδραγαθίζομαι.

Honour. (1)=esteem, respect shown to a man, τιμή, ἐντιμος. (2) State honours, τιμαί. (3) A sense of honour, αἰδώς, τὸ καλόν.

Hospital. νοσοκομεῖον, νοσοκομέω (or else some periphrasis) must be used, though neither are classical. The thing did not exist (Arnold, Later Roman Commonwealth, vol. ii. ch. xi.).

House. The House of Lords, ἡ βουλὴ—of Commons, ἡ ἐκκλησία,—οἳ τε ἐκ τοῦ βουλευτηρίου ῥήτορες καὶ οἱ ἐκ τοῦ δήμου (Æschines). καὶ ἐν βουλευτηρίῳ βουλευτὰς καὶ ἐν ἐκκλησίᾳ ἐκκλησιαστάς (Plato, Gorg. 452, E.). Also βουλεύειν, 'to be a member. Or use σύνεδροι and συνέδριον. 'To make a house,' ἐκκλησίαν ποιεῖν. (See too Appendix, No. II. l. i.)

Humanity. (1)=The human race, τὸ ἀνθρώπινον γένος, οἱ ἄνθρωποι. (2) Man's estate, τὰ ἀνθρώπινα. (3) Benevolence, φιλόανθρωπος and its derivatives. (4) For inhuman and to humanise, see Civilisation.

Humility, Humble. It is difficult to find an equivalent, as the virtue was not recognised among the heathens. μετριότης, μέτριος, come near to it, as does Aristotle's description of the σώφρων, ὁ μικρῶν ἄξιος καὶ τούτων ἄξιῶν ἑαυτὸν (Ethics, iv. 3). Avoid ταπεινός, which generally=abject, low, mean-spirited.

Humour, Humorous. κομψότης, κομψός, κομψεύειν, ἀστεῖος, χαρίεις.

Humour, i.e. to comply with another's wish, χαρίζεσθαι, καταχαρίζεσθαι, θεραπεύειν,—ἐπιφέρειν ὅργας Τισσαφέρνει (Thuc. viii. 83).

Ideal, n. and adj. ἰδέα=the archetype in the Platonic Philosophy. It is more than εἶδος, which may be used for it, but not the converse.—αὐτὸ τὸ καλόν, or τὸ ἐπ' εἶδει καλόν, essential ideal beauty, παράδειγμα οἷον ἂν εἴη ὁ κάλλιστος ἀνὴρ, a beau ideal of human beauty. ἡ κατ' εὐχὴν πολιτεία, an ideal state, opp. to ἡ ἐκ τῶν ὑποκειμένων ἀρίστη, the best under existing circumstances (see Utopia below).

Imagination. 'The power by which the mind creates for itself new ideas or images'=φαντασία (Plat. Soph. 264); but the word must be used with caution. The following must be rendered otherwise—a creature of the imagination, νοητόν τι (opp. to ὁρατόν or αἰσθητόν), an imaginary grievance, τὸ λόγῳ μὲν χαλεπὸν ἔργῳ δὲ οὐ. Let us imagine ourselves to be living at the time when Sparta, etc., γενώμεθα δὴ ταῖς διανοαῖς ἐν τῷ τότε χρόνῳ ὅτε Λακεδαιμόνων, κ. τ. λ. (Plato, Legg. iii. 683).

Improvement. Advance, ἐπίδοσις, ἐπιδιδόναι εἰς τὸ βέλτιον, to decline, ἐπὶ τὸ χεῖρον κλίνειν or ῥέπειν.

Independence, Independent. (1) αὐτόνομος and αὐτονομεῖσθαι, αὐτάρκης, αὐτοκράτωρ, the latter chiefly of an absolute ruler or Czar, hence in Polybius it = a Roman Dictator. (2) = blunt, straightforward, αὐθέκαστος (one who calls a spade a spade).

Induction. ἐπαγωγή, ἐπάγεσθαι (i.e. the formal inference of the universal whole from the aggregate of individuals). But this will not always express the wider sense of the modern Induction. The inductive sciences, e.g., would be better rendered by αἱ διὰ τῆς ἐμπειρίας ἐπιστῆμαι than by ἐπακτικός, though the latter word is Aristotelian.

Ingredient. Turn the sentence in which this occurs by using μετέχειν or μέτοχος, e.g. τὸ εὖθες οὐ τὸ γενναῖον πλεῖστον μετέχει, 'simplicity which forms so large an ingredient in a noble nature' (Thuc. iii. 83).

Innovation. To make innovations. νεωτερισμός, νεωτεροποιός (adj.), νεωτερίζω, generally in malam partem, of a revolution. Also καινοτομεῖν of neufangled changes, καινοτομοῦντός σου περὶ τὰ θεῖα (Plato, Euthyphro. 3).

Innuendo. ὕπόνοια, αἰνίττεσθαι, ὕπαινίττεσθαί τι or εἰς τι.

Inspiration, Inspired. ἐπίπνοια, ἐπίπνους, ἐνθουσιασμός, ἐνθουσιάζειν, but ἐμποιεῖν in the sense of producing a feeling in the mind of another, e.g. to inspire the subjects with fear, ἐμποιεῖν δέος τοῖς ἀρχομένοις.

Instinct. ὄρεξις, ἐπιθυμία. In the Stoic philosophy ὄρμαί=blind animal instincts; but ὄρμή in Plato =an impulse, καλὴ καὶ θεία ἡ ὄρμή.

Instrument, Instrumental. αἷτιος and its compounds μεταίτιος, συναίτιος, also by a relative clause, 'instrumental in ruining the State,' δι' ὧν ἐφθάρη ἡ πόλις.

Intuition, to perceive intuitively, νόησις, νοεῖν, τὰ νοούμενα.

Issues. Results, τὰ ἀποβαίνοντα, ἀποβάντα, or ἐκβαίνοντα. Probable results, τὰ ἀποβησόμενα or τὰ ἐκβησόμενα. For chance events, or to express a good or bad result, use συμβαίνω (see Success). The issue was uncertain, ἄδηλον ἦν τὸ τέλος ὅποτέρωσε ἔμελλε ῥέπειν.

Matter, Material. ὕλη, σῶμα, σωματοειδής, σωματικός.

σῶμα is not confined to the animal creation. A materialist, ὁ ἐκ τῶν σωμάτων πάντα συστήναι φάσκων.—The subject-matter of a treatise or discussion ἡ ὑπηρεκείμένη ὕλη,—ὑπόθεσις.

For Material=important, see Essential.

Measures. To propose a measure, γνώμην εἰπεῖν or προτιθέναι, also βουλὴν προτιθέναι. To carry a measure, ψηφίζεσθαι τι,—ψηφισμα or βουλὴν νικᾶν. Public measures, τὰ πράγματα (see Policy).

Melancholy, n. and adj. δυσθυμία, δύσθυμος.

Method. τάξις, εὐταξία, κόσμος, τὸ εὖκοσμον, εὐκοσμία, εὐρυθμία of well-ordered behaviour; κόσμος, κοσμιότης. An unmethodical ill-regulated life, τὸ μὴ συνταχθῆναι τὸν βίον (not μέθοδος).

Mind. νοῦς, διάνοια. (Avoid φρήν, which is very rare in prose, and θυμός, which is the seat of the spirited element in man: τὸ θυμοειδές=courage, anger, opp. to τὸ ἐπιθυμητικόν, in which are the desires and affections.)

Minister, n. (in a Government) ὁ προστάτης τοῦ δήμου or ὁ προεστώς, οἱ πολιτευόμενοι, οἱ ἐν τοῖς πράγμασι (see Authority).

Moral. (1) ἠθικός. The moral virtues, αἱ ἠθικαὶ ἀρεταί, opp. to αἱ διανοητικάί, the intellectual; τὰ ἠθικά, a treatise on ethics; a moral philosopher, ὁ περὶ τὰ ἦθη φιλοσοφῶν. (2)=Morally good (see Vir-tuous).

Nature, Natural. φύσις in all senses of the English word ; Natural Philosophy, τὰ φυσικά,—φύσιν ἔχει, it is natural (like πέφυκε) with Infinitive, opp. to φύσιν οὐκ ἔχει, also κατὰ φύσιν, opp. to παρὰ φύσιν, ὁ κατὰ φύσιν θάνατος, a natural death, φύσει or κατὰ φύσιν, by the natural constitution of things, opp. to νόμῳ or κατὰ νόμον, conventionally. For what is opposed to artificial, (χειροποίητος), use αὐτοφυής.

Object. (1) That with which a person or thing is concerned, or deals, may be expressed by εἶναι περί τι, or by the genitive with εἶναι. (2)=Aim, end, τέλος or σκοπός—ἔστι σκοπὸς τυραννικὸς μὲν τὸ ἡδύ, βασιλικὸς δὲ τὸ καλόν (Ar. Pol. v. 11). Also ἐκεῖνο οὗ ἕνεκα ταῦτα ποιοῦμεν, 'the object of our doing these things.' In Aristotle, τὸ οὗ ἕνεκα=the final cause of anything. Observe, too, τί μαθὼν τοῦτο ποιεῖ ; 'with what object does he do this ?' 'what put it into his head to act thus ?' (whereas τί παθὼν=what happened to him to produce this result ? what was the external cause ?)

Particulars, particularly. Singula, singulatim. ἕκαστος in various combinations, καθ' ἕκαστον, καθ' ἃν ἕκαστον, ἐφ' ἑκάστοις πᾶσι, ἕκαστόν τι. So ὡς ἕκαστοι, singuli, of individuals.

Party. A party, or faction (chiefly for seditious purposes), στάσις, στασιάζειν, στάσεις ποιεῖσθαι. Of a smaller cabal or club, τὸ ἑταιρικόν or ἑταιρεία, παράταξις, παρατάσσεσθαι. Party spirit, τὸ φιλονεικον or φιλονεικία. 'To side or enlist with Brasidas' party,' ὅπλα τίθεσθαι πρὸς Βρασίδου, or φρονεῖν τὰ Βρασίδου, or ἐπὶ τῆς αὐτῆς ὁρμεῖν τινί. Thus, or by verbs in -ίζω, different parties in modern times may be expressed, e.g. the Levellers, οἱ τὰ πάντα ὁμαλίζοντες, the Jacobites, οἱ Ἰακωβίζοντες or οἱ τὰ Ἰακώβου φρονοῦντες, the Liberals, οἱ τὰ τοῦ δήμου φρονοῦντες.

Patriotic. φιλόπολις,—ὑπὲρ τῆς πατρίδος ἀγωνιστής, ἀγωνίζεσθαι.

Perhaps. Notice the difference between τάχ' ἂν γένοιτο 'it might perhaps happen' if something else were to happen; τάχ' ἂν ἐγένετο 'it would perhaps have happened,' if something had happened; and ἴσως ἐγένετο 'perhaps it happened' (G. 42, 4). The last can also be expressed by τυχόν, or by κινδυνεύω—σου may perhaps be right, κινδυνεύεις ἀληθῆ λέγειν, or μὴ τοῦτο ἀληθὲς ᾖ;

Politics, Policy, Polity. Demosthenes (De Coroná) abounds in equivalents (see πολιτεύομαι L. & S.). The chief are ἡ προαίρεσις ἡ ἐμὴ καὶ ἡ πολιτεία, 'my line of policy,' τὰ ἐμοὶ πεπολιτευμένα, τὰ πεπραγμένα καὶ πεπολιτευμένα. The science of politics, ἡ πολιτική. State affairs, τὰ πολιτικά. A well-managed polity, εὖ οἰκούσα (or οἰκουμένη) πόλις, or ἐννομουμένη. Political institutions, τὰ καθεστῶτα νόμιμα.

Popular. δημοτικός.—δημοτερπής occurs once only (Plato, Minos, 321). φιλόανθρωπος (φιλόδημος is only found in Aristophanes).

Possible, Possibility. Besides the personal verbs δύναμαι, οἷός τέ εἶμι, and ἔχειν, remember the impersonal ἔστι, οἷόν τέ ἐστι, ἔνεστι, ἐνδέχεται, and κινδυνεύει (see above, Perhaps). As much as possible ὥς with superlatives, e.g. ὥς μάλιστα, etc. Impossible, e.g. a road impossible to enter, ὁδὸς ἀμήχανος εἰσελθεῖν. (See above, p. 27, iv.)

Prejudice, To be prejudiced. Use προκαταγινώσκειν. 'The absence of all prejudice,' τὸ μὴ προκατεγνωκεῖν μηδέν (Dem.) also ἀλλοδοξία, ἀλλοδοξεῖν, and ἑτεροδοξεῖν (Plato). Unprejudiced, express as above, or use ἴσος, εὖνους, κοινός.

Principle. Principles of action, προαίρεσις, ὑπόθεσις τοῦ βίου. First principles in science, ἀρχαί, ὑποθέσεις.

Privilege. γέρας, ἐξαίρετόν τι.

Profession. τέχνη. Professional, δημιουργός, πεπαιδευμένος (opp. to ἀπαιδευτος or ιδιώτης, ιδιωτεύειν, an amateur), δημιουργεῖν, ἐπαγγέλλεσθαι—αὐτὸ τοῦτό ἐστι τὸ ἐπάγγελμα, ὃ ἐπαγγέλλομαι, this is just the profession that I do make (Plato, Prot. 319).

Proportion. ἀναλογία, the equality of ratios (ἰσότης λόγων), due proportion, συμμετρία, εὐρυθμία, in proportion to, κατά, or ἀνὰ λόγον τινός.

Quality, Qualified. ποιότης, first used with some hesitation by Plato, Theæt. 180, the only passage where he uses the word. ποιός, the Indef. Adj., will better express quality, esp. joined with τις, as ποιός τις, ποιὰ ἅττα. 'Science itself came to be qualified in a certain manner, so that it was no longer called simply science, but, by the addition of a qualifying epithet, medical science.' ποιὰ δὴ τις ξυνέβη καὶ αὕτη γενέσθαι, καὶ τοῦτο αὐτὴν ἐποίησε μηκέτι ἐπιστήμην ἀπλῶς καλεῖσθαι ἀλλὰ τοῦ ποιοῦ τινὸς προσγενομένου ἱατρικῇν. (Plato, Rep. iv. 438.) (N.B. Distinguish this Indef. Adj. from the Interrogative ποιός.)

Realise. (1) To carry out, ἔργῳ ἐπεξίεναι or ἐπεξελθεῖν, διαπράττεσθαι—opp. to ἄπρακτος γίγνεσθαι. (2) Of things placed before the mind, as actually present to it, πρὸ τῶν ὀφθαλμῶν προφαίνεσθαι. Evils too great to be realised, μείζω ἢ κατὰ πίστιν.

Reason. λόγος. A reasonable being, λόγου μέτοχον ζῶον, or λόγου κοινωνός. Agreeable to, or contrary to reason, κατά or παρά λόγον. Reasonable, i.e. ready to listen to reason = ἐπεικής, οὐκ ἄλογος. He talks unreasonably, talks nonsense, λέγει οὐδέν, opp. to λέγειν τι, also λέγειν ἀπὸ τρόπου, like ἀπὸ σκοποῦ (wide of the mark). It is reasonable, ἔχει λόγον or εὐκρίτως ἔχει.

Religion, Religious = piety, εὐσέβεια, εὐσεβής. Religious services, τὰ εἰς τὸ θεῖον ἐπιτηδεύματα, τὰ νομιζόμενα τῷ θεῷ διδόναι. Nicias says πολλὰ ἐς θεοὺς νόμιμα δεδιῆται (Thuc. v. 77). εὐσεβεῖν τὰ πρὸς θεόν. Irreligious, τὰ ἐν ἀνθρώποις εὐσεβῇ παραβαίνειν, or ἀσεβεῖν.

Repentance, To Repent. μετάνοια, μεταγινώσκειν, μεταμέλει, impersonal, μεταμέλομαι, μεταμέλεια, μετάνελος. Also μεταμανθάνειν.

Revolution. στάσις and its numerous derivatives, στασιάζειν, στασιώτης, etc. also νεωτερισμός, νεωτεροποιός, νεωτερίζειν. νεώτερόν τι = a revolutionary movement. Other phrases are τὰ πράγματα μεταπεπτώκει a revolution had taken place. μεταβολή (μετάστασις) τῆς πολιτείας. See above, Party.

Sacrifice. Figuratively, e.g. to sacrifice life for one's country, τὸν κίνδυνον τῶν σωμάτων παραβάλλεσθαι ὑπὲρ τῆς πατρίδος (Thuc.), οὐκ ἴσα παραβαλλόμενοι (Thuc.). To give up freely (condonare) προέσθαι, 'What security do we get when we sacrifice our money?' τί λαβόντες τὸ βέβαιον προῖέμεθα τὸ ἀργύριον; (Dem.). So τὸν καιρὸν or τὰ τῆς δημοκρατίας ἰσχυρὰ προέσθαι. Also καταχρίζεσθαι τὰ δίκαια, and προπίνειν = προδιδόναι, 'the interests of the State have been sacrificed for the present pleasure,' προπέπεται τῆς αὐτίκα χάριτος τὰ τῇ πόλεως πράγματα. Also τῇς ἐλευθερίας παραχωρεῖν οἱ ἕκδοτον ποιῆσαι τὴν ἐλευθερίαν.

Sanguine. εὐελπίς, constructed with ἐπὶ, περί, πρὸς, or the infinitive, e.g. εὐελπίς σωθήσεσθαι.

Sculpture. ἡ ἀνδριαντοποιία.

Second, to. (1) Technically to join in bringing an accusation, ὑπογράφεσθαι (subscribere accusationem in aliquem), δευτεραγωνιστεῖν. (2) To support or back, generally, συναγωνίζεσθαι or συναίρεσθαι κίνδυνον.

Sensitive. αἰσθητικός. τρίτον αἰσθητικὸν ἐν ἡμῶν μέρος τὸ περὶ τὴν ἀκοήν (Plato). ὀξεῖαν τὴν αἴσθησιν ἔχειν. The opposite is ἀμβλύς. ὁ δ' ὀφείλων ἀμβλύτερος (Thuc.) less sensitive.

Spirit. πνεῦμα only=breath; for inspiration Plato uses ἐπίπνοια, see above under the word. Public spirit=φρόνημα, high-spirited θυμοειδής.

Society, Social. ἡ περὶ ἀνθρώπους, or ἡ πρὸς ἀλλήλους κοινωνία. ὁμιλία, ὁμιλῖαι. 'Man is a social animal' ἄνθρωπος φύσει πολιτικὸν ζῶον. 'Social meetings' συνοῦσαι καὶ διάλογοι,—εἰς λόγους συνελθεῖν.

Speculation, Speculative. θεωρητικός, θεωρία, opposed to practical πρακτικός, or τὸ μελετᾶν, μελέτη.

Statesman. ὁ πολιτικός (the title of one of Plato's dialogues), ὁ πολιτευόμενος, ὁ τὰ κοινὰ διοικῶν. See Minister.

Style (1) in writing. λέξις. (2)=display. καλλωπισμός, καλλωπίζεσθαι, ἐπιδειξις, ἐπιδεικνυσθαι. See Fashion.

Subject. (1) Under the dominion of, ὑποχείριός τινι, ὑπήκοος with gen. or dat. οἱ ἀρχόμενοι. (2) See Matter.

Success. To succeed προχωρεῖν,—τὰ νῦν προχωρήσαντα our present successes. κατορθοῦν, transitive and intransitive, opp. to σφάλεσθαι and πταίνειν, πταῖσμα. Also καλῶς καὶ εὖ πράττειν, εὐτυχεῖν, τὸ εὐτυχές, εὐτυχία, and εὐπραγία.

Superhuman. Express by μείζω ἢ κατ' ἄνθρωπον, ὑπερφυής, or ὑπερφυῶς ὥς.

System. (1) Order, see Discipline, Method. (2) A systematic treatise, μέθοδος.

Tendency, to tend to. πέφυκε or ἔφυ. There is a tendency in men to commit offences πεφύκασιν ἄνθρωποι ἀμαρτάνειν (Thuc. iii. 45), also μέλλειν, συμβάλλεσθαι εἰς, συντείνειν εἰς, φέρειν εἰς, and the Aristotelian use of βούλομαι, δύναμαι, and δύναμις, e.g. βούλεται τότε εἶναι πόλις ὅταν αὐτάρκη κ.τ.λ. (Ar. Pol. ii. 2), ὁ δῆμος βούλεται εἶναι μόναρχος (Ib. v. 11).

Trade, v. and n. χρηματίζεσθαι, ἡ χρηματιστική, καπηλεύειν, ἡ καπηλική, ἐργάζεσθαι, ἐργασία, ἐργολαβεῖν, ἐνεργολαβεῖν, the last two figuratively, to traffic in a thing. τέχνη or χειρουργία a trade. ἡ ἐμπορικὴ ἐπικοινωνία Free Trade.

Utilitarian. ὁ πρὸς τὸ συμφέρον (or τὸ χρήσιμον) πάντα μετρῶν. The dative is also used with μετρεῖν.

Utopia, Utopian (οὗ τόπος). Use ἡ ἐν λόγοις κειμένη, — ἡ κατ' εὐχὴν πολιτεία (see Ideal) or αἱ ὑπὸ τῶν φιλοσόφων καλῶς οἰκισθεῖσαι (or ἐσκιαγραφημέναι) πολιτεῖαι, or μακάρων νῆσοι.

Valetudinarianism. ἡ νοσοτροφία.

Versatility, Versatile. πολύτροπος, τὸ πολύτροπον τῆς γνώμης. (Thuc. iii. 83.)

Virtuous. σπουδαῖος, ἐπιεικής. (See Honest.)

Visionary. τὸ φαινόμενον, opp. to τὸ ὄν, — or φάντασμα. Also εἰδωλον and ψεῦδος are used, as opposed to a true creation of genius. (See Genius and Imagination).

Volunteer. (1) ἐθελοντής, ἀπαράκλητος. (2) Of a statement volunteered, αὐτεπάγγελτος.

Vulgar. φορτικός, of mechanical arts βάνανσος, βανανσία, wanting in taste ἀπειρόκαλος, ἀπειροκαλία — φαῦλος καὶ ἀγοραῖος.

Wit, Witty. εὐτραπεία, defined by Aristotle ὕβρις πεπαιδευμένη. The εὐτράπελος he also defines as ὁ ἐμμελῶς παίζων 'sportive in good taste.' Also κομψός, ἀστεῖος, χαρίεις. — οἰκέα σύνεσις 'mother wit,' (opp. to μάθησις) — ἀγχίνουα, ἀγχίνους.

World. (1) The universe, mundus = κόσμος or τόδε τὸ πᾶν. (2) The known world, orbis terrarum = γῆ, or πᾶσα ἡ γῆ. (3) The men in the world οἱ ἄνθρωποι. The best or finest in the world ἄριστα, or κάλλιστ' ἐν ἀνθρώποις. (4) This world τὰ ἐνθάδε, opp. to a future state τὰ ἐκεῖ. Also βίος or ὁ ἐνθάδε βίος.

Obs. The above list is not intended to supply an exact equivalent which may be introduced on every occasion, whatever be the context. It is meant to suggest the way in which complex English ideas can be approximately rendered. Many such ideas cannot be adequately represented by any one word. To learn by heart a string of words to be introduced regardless of the context in which they occur, is worse than useless. It is to strengthen the memory unduly at the expense of the reason. On the other hand, to weigh well the various meanings of words, to compare their force in different languages, and to substitute synonyms which will best draw out their fuller signification, is a mental effort of no mean value.

XXVI. METAPHORS.

(μεταφορά, translatio, the transference of a word from its original to an analogous meaning.) No remarks on Attic Greek Prose would be complete without some notice of the way in which to deal with Metaphors. It will be seen from the above list of phrases that Greek and English metaphors occasionally (e.g. in Inspiration) coincide, but that as frequently (e.g. in the word Sacrifice) the figurative expression must either be given up, or a different one substituted. So 'to lower one's flag before an enemy' must be rendered by ὑποστέλλεσθαι, which approaches the English idea, or καθυφίεσθαι, or by some word which is not a nautical figure. 'The field opened out was too large for the capacity of the orator,' οἱ τόποι (the subjects) μείζονες ἦσαν ἢ κατὰ τὸν ῥήτορα. Even where the figure employed in English is congenial to the Greek language, the introduction of it in translation cannot always be admitted, or at least not without caution. The following sentence in Burke's description of Charles Townshend's style of oratory, 'He hit the House just between wind and water,' would naturally seem to suggest some image drawn from the sea. This, however, might have necessitated an awkward periphrasis. The passage was perhaps equally well rendered by a Homeric line extemporised in an examination, μέσσον θώρηκός τε καὶ ἀμφιβρότου ζωστήηρος.—'To appeal to the sword,' express by ἡ βία or διαμάχεσθαι.

Remember that many metaphors in our everyday speech have long since become conventional. We use them unconsciously or half consciously ; and this explains such anomalies as 'taking up arms against a sea of troubles,' etc. Do not therefore attempt to render such expressions as 'a fiery oration,' 'a spotless character,' 'a thirst for glory,' 'the people were thunderstruck by the news,' in all cases literally. Some metaphors we should naturally expect to find more frequently than others in Attic. It has often been remarked that the habits, amusements, and tastes of a nation can be traced in their metaphors. In reading any Greek author make a list of those which you meet. Many are common to Poetry and Prose; but there is somewhat less freedom of range in the words used in the latter. For the following list (which does not pretend to anything like completeness) there is authority in the best Attic Prose writers.

1. Nautical. ὑποστέλλεσθαι τινα, to shrink from a person, or to conceal, suppress a thing (from lowering sail)—ἐπὶ τῆς αὐτῆς (sc. ἀγκυρᾶς) ὀρμεῖν τοῖς πολλοῖς (to ride by the same anchor with), ἐπὶ δυοῖν ἀγκυραῖν ὀρμεῖν 'to have two strings to your bow.' So ἐφορμεῖν τοῖς καιροῖς, and κατὰ τὸν δεύτερον πλοῦν. σαλεύειν,—of persons νόσοις ἢ γήρᾳ, σάλος of the State ἐν πολλῷ σάλῳ καὶ κινδύνῳ γενομένην. κάλως—πάντα κάλων ἐκτείνειν (ἐξιέναι, κινεῖν) to strain every nerve (stretch every rope). ἀνακρούεσθαι 'to go back in an argument,' from backing water. κυβερνᾶν—τῆς πόλεως πάντα κυβερνῶσα,—πέλαγος τῶν λόγων.

2. Military. ἀμβλύς (from a sword's edge blunted)—ἀμβλύτερος τὴν ὀργήν.—προβάλλεσθαι (from a shield) used of any defence or excuse.—παραχωρεῖν τῆς τάξεως τῆς ἀρετῆς of surrendering the post of honour.

3. Theatrical. δευτεραγωνιστεῖν, to support or second a speaker. ὑποκρίνεσθαι, to play a part, dissemble (twice in Demosthenes). υποδύεσθαι, to personate. χορηγεῖν, in Aristotle of the εὐδαίμων who must be τοῖς ἐκτὸς ἀγαθοῖς ἱκανῶς κεχορηγημένος (furnished with external goods sufficient for acting his part in the drama of life).

4. From Art. Sculpture, τύπος, ἐν τύπῳ 'in outline,' πλάσσω to mould e.g. ψυχάς by education, also to fabricate e.g. λόγους. Painting, σκιαγραφέω to sketch out. Music, πλημμελής, πλημμέλεια, out of tune, then of offences generally. ἑμμελής in tune, well-ordered. ῥυθμίζω to order, arrange.

5. From the Public Games. ἄμιλλα, ἐνάμιλλος. (a) Wrestling, δυσπάλαιστος δύναμις. (b) The umpires, τὰ τῶν ἄλλων δίκαια βραβεύειν. (c) Training, ἔλκυσον δὲ σαντὸν καὶ γύμνασαι μᾶλλον (in Logic)—γεγυμνασμένοι τὰς ἔξεις (Ar.).

6. Hunting. ἡ τοῦ ὄντος θήρα (Plato), θηρᾶσθαι δόξαν (Dem.).

7. Archery. σκοποῦ στοχάζεσθαι.

8. Games. (a) Dice. περὶ φίλοις κυβεύειν—ἀναρρίπτειν κίνδυνον—τὸ πάρον εὖ θέσθαι, and εὖ ποιεῖν, 'to make the best of a throw.' (b) Draughts ἀναθέσθαι τι to cancel (to revoke a move). (c) The game played with shells (ὀστρακίνα) ὀστράκου περιστροφή, ὀστράκου μεταπεσόντος, (of a sudden change of mind).

9. Banquets. προπίνειν. (See Sacrifice, p. 97.)

10. Flowers. ἀνθεῖν, ἄνθος, of the flower of an army (Thuc.). ἀνθηρός, ἀνθηρότερον λέγειν, of style (Isocrates). θάλλειν, καταρρεῖν, ἀπανθεῖν—ἀνανθες καὶ ἀπανθηκὸς σῶμα, past its bloom (Plato).

11. Trades. (a) Weaving, πλέκειν λόγους—μηχανάς—συνπλέκειν (ἐὰν συμπλακῇ πόλεμος). (b) Building and Carpentry, ἡ ἀρχιτεκτονικὴ τέχνη, the master science which prescribes to all beneath it.—τῶν πράξεων αἱ ὑποθέσεις. (c) Welding metal, συγκροτεῖν ναῦς (see Discipline, p. 85). (d) παρακρούεσθαι, first of cheating in weighing, then to mislead generally. (e) καπηλεύειν τὰ μαθήματα, to sell learning by retail, to hawk it about. (f) To buy = to rate generally. οὐκ ἂν πρῆαίῳ γε παμπύλλου ὥστε σοι ταῦτ' εἰρῆσθαι (Xen. quoted by Jebb on Aj. 477).

12. Coinage. παράσημος, κίβδηλος spurious, base. κόμμα (πονηροῦ κόμματος 'of bad stamp'), and παρακόπτω only in Aristophanes, but perhaps allowable in Prose.

13. Medicine. ἰατρὸς τῆς πόλεως (Thuc.), ὑγιής.

14. Horses. μικρὸν πταῖσμα ἅπαντα ἀνεχαίτισε (Dem.), a slight reverse upsets everything (as a horse rears and throws his rider).

15. Banking. κατατίθεσθαι χάριν.

XXVII. THE ORDER OF WORDS.

Prose has been defined to be 'proper words in their proper places.' In the best writers this is felt to be the fundamental characteristic which stamps them as models of perfect style. Take for instance as a piece of description, the spirit-stirring picture of the catastrophe in the great harbour at Syracuse (Thuc. vii. 70), or the justly-admired account in Demosthenes (De Coronâ, ch. 169, ἰστέρα μὲν γὰρ ἦν) of the capture of Elatea. How powerful, how deeply affecting is the former, how animated and picturesque is the latter! Take the vivid contrast of the Spartan and Athenian character (Thuc. i. 70), or the summary of Pericles' policy (ib. ii. 65). Or take the opening and the closing paragraphs of Plato's Republic: how natural, how simple and impressive are they! What is the secret of this? It is that every word is the right word and is in its right place. There is no gaudy ornament, no prolixity, no obscurity. These are the great points to study, as in all writing so in Greek Prose. Imitative it must be, but it is possible to catch the spirit of an English passage, and yet clothe it, so far as may be, in a Greek dress, without copying the anacolutha or other peculiarities of diction which occasionally are found even in the best authors.

Emphasis, Euphony, Rhythm, occasional Antithesis, above all Perspicuity,—these are what should regulate the structure of a Greek sentence. (For fuller treatment of each of these, see Wilkins' Greek Prose, p. 16; Clyde, § 88; Madvig, § 217; and on Hyperbaton, the displacement of the natural order, see Riddell's Apology, Appendix, 287.)

Remember—

1. The order of words is less inverted in Greek than in Latin.
2. The chief distinction between the arrangement in Greek and English arises from inflection, a Synthetic language allowing the separation of words which, with us, must be connected.
3. Specially emphatic words stand at the beginning or the end of the sentence.
4. 'In the logical order the subject stands first and the predicate last, whatever is in apposition to the subject being appended to it, and whatever words belong to the predicate being prefixed to it.' (Clyde.)
5. Where a verb has two objects the person is put before the thing, e.g. τὸν παῖδα τὴν γραμματικὴν διδάσκω. (C.)
6. Arrange adverbs of Time, Place, and Manner thus :

οἱ Ἕλληνες ταύτῃ τῇ ἡμέρᾳ ἐν Μαραθῶνι τοὺς
Time Place
 Πέρσας καλῶς ἐνίκησαν.
Manner

7. Avoid too frequent hiatus.
8. In subordinate clauses, relative clauses (being adjectival) follow the noun, declarative and interrogative clauses follow immediately after the verb on which they depend. (C.)

e.g. οἶσταί με ἐκεῖνον εἶναι, ὃν ὄψεται ὀλίγον ὑστερον νεκρόν, καὶ ἐρωτᾷ δὴ πῶς με θάπτῃ.
(Plato, Phæd. 115.)

9. Notice special collocations of words.

- (a) The position of the adjective in the use of the Tertiary Predicate. (See I. 5, p. 4.)
- (b) The position of ἄν near the beginning of a sentence to attract attention to the contingent nature of the sentence that is to follow. This is common in Thucydides. ὥς δ' ἂν ἐδόκουν εἰπεῖν (i. 20) for ὥς ἐδοκοῦν εἰπεῖν ἄν.
- (c) Similarly with negatives, to mark the negative statement that is coming, put the negative particle at the beginning, with verbs of saying and thinking.

e.g. He says that he made no change in the constitution, οὐ φησιν οὐδὲν μεταβαλεῖν τῆς πολιτείας. He declared he would not ransom them, οὐκ ἔφασκεν αὐτοὺς λύσσεσθαι. They think sufficient money could never be brought in, οὐχ ἡγούνται ἱκανὰ ἂν ποτε χρήματα εἰσενε-χθῆναι. Similarly μή with προσποιεῖσθαι for προσποιεῖσθαι μή. Thuc. iii. 47, δεῖ δὲ καὶ εἰ ἡδίκησαν μή προσποιεῖσθαι

'we must pretend (or affect) not to notice it'

(d) The transposition of the subject of a dependent declaratory clause, so as to become the object of the previous clause (οἰδὰ σε τίς ἐστίν). This figure (technically called Antiptosis) is a highly important one.

(1) Its object is to give compactness and unity to the whole sentence, by bringing the subject of the dependent clause prominently forward.

(2) Instances of its use.

The close of the first sentence in Plato's Republic, τὴν ἑορτὴν βουλόμενος θεάσασθαι τίνα τρόπον ποιήσουσι, 'to see how they would celebrate the festival.'

οἶσθα Εὐθύδημον ὅπόσους ὀδόντας ἔχει;

(Plato, Euth. 294.)

'Do you know how many teeth Euthydemus has?'

ἔδεισαν οἱ Ἕλληνες τὸν Ἰάσονα μὴ τύραννος γένοιτο. (Xen. Hellen. vi. 4.)

'The Greeks were afraid of Jason's becoming tyrant.'

- (3) Applications of it. Do not translate 'you have tested our behaviour towards you' by πεπειρασθε τῆς ἡμετέρας ὀργῆς κ.τ.λ., but πεπειρασθε ἡμῶν ὅποιοι τίνες ἔσμεν εἰς ὑμᾶς, nor 'they wished to draw attention to the formidable power of their own state' by ἐβούλοντο σημῆναι τὴν φοβερὰν δύναμιν τῆς σφετέρας πόλεως, but by τὴν σφετέραν πόλιν σημῆναι ὥς φοβερὰ εἴη τὴν δύναμιν. See another instance in the Appendix (No. I. ἄξιον ἦν ἰδεῖν τοὺς ἱππότας, κ.τ.λ.)

10. The clauses (similarly) may be sometimes transposed with effect so as to shift the cause or reason, which in English is at the conclusion, to the front of the sentence, introduced by ἀλλὰ γάρ—e.g. ἀλλὰ γάρ ἐμπέπτωκα εἰς λόγους, οὓς αὐτίκα μᾶλλον ἴσως ἀρμόσει λέγειν· ἐπάνειμι δὴ πάλιν ἐπὶ τὰς ἀποδείξεις. (Dem. de Cor. 240.)

Obs. It will often happen that the requisite meaning will be equally well expressed by one set of words as by another. A good ear in these cases is essential in the choice that is made, while euphony, and euphony alone, can determine the order to be adopted.

XXVIII. CONCLUSION.

These remarks only aim at pointing out some of the commonest and most obvious faults to be avoided in Greek Prose composition. Many of them indeed might seem too elementary to need stating, did not experience prove the contrary. Quintilian, in writing on style, says 'Prima virtus est vitio carere' (viii. 3, 41). It is prima indeed, but of course it is very far from being ultima. To shun gross mistakes and steer clear of grammatical inaccuracies is one thing. It is another thing to attain excellence and fluency. 'Vitavi denique culpam, non laudem merui.' The object, however, of these Hints is to encourage, not to dissuade. What then is absolutely necessary? First, to remember that 'reading makes a full man;' and, secondly, that 'writing makes an exact man.' The two must go hand in hand. It is vain to imagine that a good style can be acquired, or a bald and cramped one escaped, without constant and careful observation of the way in which the best Greek authors express themselves. And, as one branch of the writing,—translating and, after a sufficient interval, retranslating from some standard author, till the habit of using the right word in the right place is gradually acquired, can hardly be too strongly recommended. Thirdly, learn by heart several of the choicest passages of the Greek historians or orators, such as those mentioned in the last paragraph. But whatever it be, let it be chosen because it is recognised as noble and beautiful in itself, and felt to approach perfection. Continuing the words of Horace, we may say in conclusion—

Vos exemplaria Græca
Nocturnâ versate manu, versate diurnâ.

APPENDIX OF TRANSLATIONS.

I.

The Englishmen who were in three battels, lying on the ground to rest them, as soon as they saw the Frenchmen approach, they rose upon their feet, fair and easily, without any haste, and arranged their battles. . . . | Also the same season there fell a great rain and a clyps, with a terrible thunder, and before the rain there came flying over both battles a great number of crows for fear of the tempest coming. Than anon the air began to wax clear, and the sun to shine fair and bright, the which was right in the Frenchmen's eyen and on the Englishmen's backs. Whan the Genoese were assembled together and began to approach, they made a great leap and cry, to abash the Englishmen; but they stood still and stirred not for all that. Than the Genoese again the second time made another leap and a fell cry, and stept forward a little; and the Englishmen removed not one foot. Thirdly again they leapt and cried, and went forth till they came within shot. Than they shot fiercely with their crossbows. Than the English archers stept forth one pace and let fly their arrows so wholly and so thick that it seemed snow. Whan

the Genoese felt the arrows piercing through heads, arms and breasts, many of them cast down their cross-bows and returned discomfited. Whan the French king saw them fly away, he said 'Slay these rascals, for they shall let and trouble us without reason.' Than ye should have seen the men of arms dash in among them, and killed a great number of them. And ever still the Englishmen shot where as they saw thickest press: the sharp arrows came into the men of arms and into their horses; and many fell, horse and men, among the Genoese; and whan they were down, they could not relive again, the press was so thick that one overthrew another.

Lords and Commons of England, consider what nation it is whereof ye are, and whereof ye are the governours: a nation not slow and dull, but of a quick, ingenious and piercing spirit, acute to invent, subtle and sinewy to discourse, not beneath the reach of any point the highest that human capacity can soar to. Therefore the studies of learning in her deepest science have been so ancient, and so eminent among us, that writers of good antiquity and ablest judgement have been persuaded that even the school of Pythagoras and the Persian wisdom took

It is hard to tell whether they are more dexterous in laying or avoiding ambushes; they sometimes seem to fly when it is far from their thoughts; and when they intend to give ground, they do it so that it is very hard to find out their design. If they see they are ill posted, or are like to be overpowered by numbers, then they either march off in the night with great silence, or by some stratagem they delude their enemies; if they retire in the daytime, they do it in such order that it is no less dangerous to fall upon them in a retreat than in a march. They fortify their camps well with a deep and a large trench, and throw up the earth that is dug out of it for a wall; nor do they employ only their slaves in this, but the whole army works at it, except those that are then upon the guard; so that when so many hands are at work, a great line and a strong fortification is finished in so short a time that it is scarcely credible. . . . If they agree to a truce, they observe it so religiously that no provocations will make them break it. They never lay their enemies' country waste, nor burn their

They hurt no man that they find disarmed, unless he is a spy. When a town is surrendered to them, they take it into their protection ; and when they carry a place by storm they never plunder it, but put those only to the sword that opposed the rendering it up, and make the rest of the garrison slaves : but for the other inhabitants, they do them no hurt ; and if any of them had advised a surrender of it, they give them good rewards out of the estates of those that they condemn, and distribute the rest among their auxiliary troops, but they themselves take no share of the spoil.

The senate ordered the general to level the city of Carthage and the suburb of Magalia with the ground, and to do the same with all the places which had held by Carthage to the last : and thereafter to pass the plough over the site of Carthage, so as to put an end in legal form to the existence of the city, and to curse the soil and site for ever, that neither house nor corn-field might ever reappear on the spot. The command was punctually obeyed. The ruins burned for seventeen days. Recently, when the remains of

A still more marvellous story afterwards found credit: that Calanus, just before his death, had declined to take leave of Alexander, saying that he should soon meet him at Babylon. Still the priests found that they could not induce the king to give up his intention of visiting the capital of his empire, where many important affairs were to be transacted, and embassies from remote parts of the world were awaiting his arrival. They then urged him at least not to enter the city in the direction in which he was then marching, by the eastern gate, so as to have his face turned towards the dark west; but to make a circuit, and enter from the opposite quarter. This mysterious advice struck Alexander's fancy: he wished to comply with it, and for that purpose altered the course of his march, and proceeded some distance along the bank of the Euphrates.

Let us remember what vicissitudes we have seen. Let us, from so many signal examples of the inconstancy of fortune, learn moderation in prosperity. How little we thought, when we saw this man a favourite courtier at Whitehall, a general surrounded with military pomp at Hounslow, that we should live to see him standing at our bar, and awaiting his doom from our lips! And how far is it from certain that we may not one day, in the bitterness of our souls, vainly invoke the protection of those mild laws which we now treat so lightly! God forbid that we should ever again be subject to tyranny! But God forbid, above all, that our tyrants should ever be able to plead, in justification of the worst that they can inflict upon us, precedents furnished by ourselves!

Midas, king of the Brygians in Macedonia, had at the foot of Mount Bermison a garden, in which grew spontaneously roses of sixty petals, and of extraordinary fragrance. To this garden Silenus was in the habit of repairing; and Midas, or his people, by pouring wine into the fount from which he was wont to drink, intoxicated him, and he was thus captured. Midas put various questions to him respecting the origin of things and the events of past times. One was, 'What is best for men?' Silenus was long silent: at length, when he was constrained to answer, he said, 'Ephemeral seed of a toilsome fate and hard fortune, why do ye oblige me to tell what it were better for you not to know? Life is most free from pain when one is ignorant of future evils. It is best of all for man not to be born; the second is, for those who are born to die as soon as possible.'

On his way to prison Phocion suffered some gross insults from the populace with meekness and dignity. Though the day was a holiday and marked by an equestrian procession, the sentence was immediately executed. Phocion met his end with the playful composure and gentle equanimity of Socrates. He endeavoured to cheer his fellow-sufferers, and, as the strongest proof of friendship, permitted Nicocles to drink the hemlock before him. When he was asked if he had any message for his son Phocus: Only, he said, not to bear a grudge against the Athenians. As the draught prepared proved not sufficient for all, and the jailor demanded to be paid for a fresh supply, he desired one of his friends to satisfy the man, observing that Athens was a place where one could not even die for nothing.

Emigration, instead of an occasional vent, is becoming a steady outlet for superfluous numbers ; and this new fact in modern history, together with the flush of prosperity occasioned by free trade, have granted to this overcrowded country a temporary breathing time, capable of being employed in accomplishing those moral and intellectual improvements in all classes of the people, the very poorest included, which would render improbable any relapse into the overpeopled state. Whether this golden opportunity will be properly used, depends on the wisdom of our councils ; and whatever depends on that is always in a high degree precarious. The grounds of hope are, that there has been no time in our history when mental progress has depended so little on governments, and so much on the general disposition of the people ; none in which the spirit of improvement has extended to so many branches of human affairs at once, nor in which all kinds of suggestions tending to the public good, in every department, from the humblest physical to the highest moral or intellectual, were heard with so little prejudice, and had so good a chance of becoming known and being fairly considered.—MILL, Political Economy.

I tremble for the cause of liberty, from such an example to kings. I tremble for the cause of humanity, in the unpunished outrages of the most wicked of mankind. But there are some people of that low and degenerate fashion of mind, that they look up with a sort of complacent awe and admiration to kings, who know to keep firm in their seat, to hold a strict hand over their subjects, to assert their prerogative, and by the awakened vigilance of a severe despotism to guard against the very first approaches of freedom. Against such as these they never elevate their voice. Deserters from principle, listed with fortune, they never see any good in suffering virtue, nor any crime in prosperous usurpation.—E. BURKE.

indeed, he possessed in the world. The troops, on the other hand, would derive some great advantage from it by the addition of a hundred able-bodied recruits, before required to man the vessels. But even had the fleet been saved, it would have been of little service in the present expedition, since they would not need it if they succeeded, while they would be too far in the interior to profit by it if they failed. He besought them to turn their thoughts in another direction. To be thus calculating chances and means of escape was unworthy of brave souls. They had set their hands to the work ; to look back as they advanced would be their ruin. They had only to resume their former confidence in themselves and their general, and success was certain.—PRESCOTT.

The Gauls gradually retreated upon their waggons, but always presenting their face to their opponents. The entrenchment which they had so hastily thrown up, and behind which they had so long defended themselves, was at last carried ; but a vast body escaped from the field, one hundred and thirty thousand according to Cæsar's computation, and succeeded, by rapid marches northward, in reaching the borders of the Lingones in four days. The care of the wounded and the necessity of seeking provisions at Bibracte prevented Cæsar from pursuing them.

Truth is always consistent with itself, and needs nothing to help it out ; it is always near at hand, and sits upon our lips, and is ready to drop out before we are aware ; whereas a lie is troublesome, and sets a man's invention upon the rack, and one trick needs a great many more to make it good. It is like building upon a false foundation, which continually stands in need of props to shore it up, and proves at last more chargeable than to have raised a substantial building at first upon a true and solid foundation ; for sincerity is firm and substantial, and there is nothing hollow or unsound in it, and, because it is plain and open, fears no discovery ; of which the crafty man is always in danger ; and when he thinks he walks in the dark, all his pretences are so transparent, that he that runs may read them. He is the last man that finds himself to be found out ; and whilst he takes it for granted that he makes fools of others, he renders himself ridiculous.

some misfortune is said to have happened, some crime to have been committed, no enquiry ought to be set on foot. Sir, the ill posture of our affairs both abroad and at home, the melancholy situation we are in, the distresses we are now reduced to, are sufficient causes for enquiry, even supposing he were accused of no particular crime or misconduct. The nation is bleeding, perhaps expiring. The balance of power has received a deadly blow. Shall we acknowledge this to be the case, and shall we not enquire whether it has happened by mischance or by the misconduct, perhaps the malice prepense, of our minister here at home? Before the treaty of Utrecht, it was the general opinion that in a few years of peace we should be able to pay off most of our debts. We have now been very near thirty years in profound peace; at least we have never been engaged in any war but what we unnecessarily brought on ourselves; and yet our debts are nearly as great as they were when that treaty was concluded. Is not this a misfortune, and shall we make no enquiry how this misfortune has happened?—LORD CHATHAM.

We may observe much the same difference between wisdom and cunning, both as to the objects they propose and to the means they employ, as we observe between the visual powers of different men. One sees distinctly the objects that are near to him, their immediate relations, and their direct tendencies: and a sight like this serves well enough the purpose of those who concern themselves no further. The cunning minister is one of those: he neither sees, nor is concerned to see, any further than his personal interests, and the support of his administration, require. If such a man overcomes any actual difficulty, avoids any immediate distress, or, without doing either of ~~these~~ effectually, gains a little time, by all the low artifice which cunning is ready to suggest and baseness of mind to employ, he triumphs, and is flattered by his mercenary train, on the great event; which amounts often to no more than this, that he got into distress by one series of faults, and out of it by another. The wise minister sees, and is concerned to see further, because government has a further concern: he sees the objects that are distant as well as those that are near, and all their remote relations, and even their indirect tendencies. He thinks of fame as well as of applause, and prefers that, which to be enjoyed must be given, to that which may be bought. He considers his administration as a single day in the great year of government; but as a day that is affected by those which went before, and that must affect those which are to follow.—BOLINGBROKE.

nation that, though they were animated by a desire of glory, glory was not their ultimate object ; but that everything dear to them in religion, in law, in liberty, everything which, as freemen, as Englishmen, and as citizens, they had at heart, was then at stake. This was to know the true art of gaining the affections and confidence of an high-minded people. This was to understand human nature. A danger to avert a danger—a present inconvenience and suffering to prevent a foreseen future and a worse calamity—these are the motives that belong to an animal, who, in his constitution, is at once adventurous and provident, circumspect and daring : whom his Creator has made, as the poet says, ‘of large discourse, looking before and after.’ But never can a vehement and sustained spirit of fortitude be kindled in a people by a war of calculation. It has nothing that can keep the mind erect under the gusts of adversity. Even where men are willing, as sometimes they are, to barter their blood for lucre, to hazard their safety for the gratification of their avarice, the passion which animates them to that sort of conflict, like all the short-sighted passions, must see its objects distinct and near at hand.—E. But youth, sir, is not my only crime. I have been accused of acting a theatrical part. A theatrical part may either imply some peculiarities of gesture, or a dissimulation of my real sentiments, and an adoption of the opinions and language of another man. In the first sense, sir, the charge is too trifling to be repeated, and deserves only to be mentioned that it may be despised. I am at liberty, like every other man, to use my own language ; and though perhaps I may have more ambition to please this gentleman, I shall not lay myself under any restraint, nor very solicitously copy his diction or his mien, however matured by age or modelled by experience. But if any man shall, by charging me with theatrical behaviour, imply that I utter any sentiments but my own, I shall treat him as a calumniator and a villain ; nor shall any protection shield him from the treatment he deserves. I shall on such an occasion, without scruple, trample upon all those forms with which wealth and dignity intrench themselves ; nor shall anything but age restrain my resentment : age, which always brings one privilege, that of being insolent and supercilious without punishment.—LORD CHATHAM.

Poets have lived so in times when true nobleness was better revered ; and so should they ever live. Sufficiently provided for within, they had need of little from without ; the gift of communicating lofty emotions and glorious images to men, in melodies and words that charmed the ear, and fixed themselves inseparably on whatever objects they referred to, of old enraptured the world, and served the gifted as a rich inheritance. At the courts of kings, at the tables of the great, beneath the windows of the fair, the sound of them was heard, while the ear and the soul were shut for all beside ; and men felt as we do when delight comes over us, and we stop with rapture, if among the dingles we are crossing the voice of the nightingale starts out touching and strong. They found a home in every habitation of the world, and the lowliness of their condition but exalted them the more. The hero listened to their songs ; and the conqueror of the earth did reverence to a poet, for he felt that, without poets, his own wild and vast exist-

Sweet funeral bells from some incalculable distance, wailing over the dead that die before the dawn, awakened me as I slept in a boat moored to some familiar shore. The morning twilight even then was breaking; and by the dusky revelations which it spread, I saw a girl, adorned with a garland of white roses about her head for some great festival, running along the solitary strand in extremity of haste. Her running was the running of panic; and often she looked back as to some dreadful enemy in the rear. But when I leaped ashore, and followed on her steps to warn her of a peril in front, alas! from me she fled as from another peril, and vainly I shouted to her of quicksands that lay ahead. Faster and faster she ran; round a promontory of rocks she wheeled out of sight; in an instant I also wheeled round it, but only to see the treacherous sands gathering above her head. Already her person was buried; only the fair young head and the diadem of white roses around it were still visible to the pitying heavens; and last of all was visible one white marble arm. I saw by the early twilight this fair young head, as it was sinking down to darkness—saw this marble arm, as it rose above her head and her treacherous grave, tossing, faltering, rising, clutching, as at some false deceiving hand stretched out from the clouds—saw this marble arm uttering her dying hope, and then uttering her dying despair. The head, the diadem, the arm—these had all sunk ; at last over these also the cruel quicksand had closed ; and no memorial of the fair girl, except my own solitary tears, and the funeral bells from the desert seas, that, rising again more softly, sang a requiem over the grave of the buried child, and over her blighted dawn.—DE QUINCEY.

And so she lay, with the soft night air breathing on her while she glided on the water and watched the deepening quiet of the sky. She was alone now : she had freed herself from all claims, she had freed herself even from that burden of choice which presses with heavier and heavier weight when claims have loosed their guiding hold.

Had she found anything like the dream of her girlhood? No. Memories hung upon her like the weight of broken wings that could never be lifted—memories of human sympathy which even in its pains leaves a thirst that the Great Mother has no milk to still. Romola felt orphaned in those wide spaces of sea and sky. She read no message of love for her in that far-off symbolic writing of the heavens, and with a great sob she wished that she might be gliding into death.

She drew the cowl over her head again and covered her face, choosing darkness rather than the light of the stars, which seemed to her like the hard light of eyes that looked at her without seeing her. Presently she felt that she was in the grave, but not resting there: she was touching the hands of the beloved dead beside her, and trying to wake them.

‘True,’ replied Hermann; ‘you have judged correctly. But this is exactly a proof of what I myself said, that the substratum of character is good, excellent indeed, only in nineteen cases out of twenty nothing is built on it, because the surroundings furnish nothing wherewith to build. Narrow interests, petty aims, unsettled habits, discomfort, want, may not absolutely destroy a superior nature: but they warp it, cramp it, thwart it, till it becomes a mere possibility of unfulfilled promise, a stunted and fruitless growth. Education, order, and comfort are, I see, not less necessary to the development of man, than air, water, and sunlight are to that of a plant. Some indeed struggle through and flourish after a fashion: some higher-natured than ordinary, and favoured by outer circumstances, attain perfection: but not many. Of these was my poor brother Moharib; whose faculties early and intense passion, well bestowed, stimulated into a fulness which subsequent chances of life maintained and strengthened.'

'How was that?' asked Tantawee. 'Did he never tell you the past history of his love and life? You alluded to it, if I remember, before.'

Hermann was about to reply: but even then a touch of air cooler and brisker than they had yet felt, blew off the shore and swept the deck, then died away. 'Midnight is past,' said he; 'that is the land-wind, and morning is not far off. If I begin with
